By the Associated Press
Buenos Aires, June 4.—Gen. Arturo Rawson led Argentine troops today in a revolt that sent President Ramon Castillo and his isolationist ministers fleeing to an Argentine warship, set himself up as head of a provisional military government, and declared martial law throughout the country.

Rawson, a 59-year-old cavalry commander, is known for his pro-Ally sentiments, and at least one of the proclamations said to have been issued by him pledged Argentina's cooperation in a "true American union of collaboration and compliance with our international duties."

Although there still was no clear-cut definition of the foreign policy of the new regime, one of the first visible results was the arrest of a prominent pro-Axis nationalist, Manuel Fresco.

Castillo and his ministers boarded the gunboat Drummond as Rawson's 7000 troops marched on Buenos Aires at dawn from the military barracks outside the city. From his ship, which still tonight was cruising about the wide Rio de la Plata estuary, Castillo began issuing proclamations defying the insurgents.

(Montevideo reported that Castillo and his ministers had arrived at the Uruguayan port of Colonia tonight, but informed sources said the ousted officials were not entering into exile.)

The Uruguayan Ministry of the Interior granted permission for the entry of the political fugitives, but it was said Castillo refused to leave his "seat of government" aboard the Argentine river boat Drummond.

Instead Castillo sent his Interior Minister, Miguel Cullaciati, ashore to obtain food and medicine for himself and the other members of the isolationist cabinet.

(Sources close to the Uruguayan Interior Ministry said Castillo refused to land because he would lose his rights as President, and the Drummond was kept ready to sail back into the river. An Argentine President must receive congressional approval to leave the country.)

Kinnick, Football Star, Dies in War

Omaha, Neb., June 4.—Ensign Nile C. Kinnick, Jr., All-American football player at the University of Iowa, was killed in action, the Navy Department at Washington notified his father, Nile C. Kinnick, Sr., an examiner for the Farm Land Bank here, today.

Kinnick served on an unidentified aircraft carrier. The Navy Department reported his plane made a forced landing in the sea and that his body, which had been observed falling free from the plane just before it crashed, had not been recovered.

Chiang's Armies Beat Forward Rapidly
On Both Wings

By Spencer Moosa
Associated Press Staff Writer

Chungking, China (Saturday), June 5.—The Chinese armies beating forward fast on both wings on the Central China Front, have thrown substantially the last of the Japanese invaders out of the area north of Lake Tungting by reaching the Yangtze River at Chongchiao and have swept into Yangtze and the Yangtze to the north, Chiang Kai-shek's command announced today.

Ansiang, 10 miles west of the previously recaptured Japanese stronghold of Nanchien on Lake Tungting, also had fallen to Chinese arms, it was added, most of the Japanese troops there having been annihilated.

Along the upper part of the front, Chinese columns at last report had entered the Japanese river base of Itu in pursuit of Japanese forces seeking to cross there in their disorderly retreat in Hupeh Province.

Particular importance was attached here to the penetration to Owchikow, for it appeared that the Chinese might be able to cut off the retreat of Japanese warships, including the Yangtze flagship, which had steamed into that area before the Chinese comeback.

Official Chinese announcements described the Japanese flight as a rout, which was being bloodily punished by American and Chinese airmen, who kept the Yangtze crossing under powerful assault.

In Itu, 28 miles below the main enemy base at Ichang, savage street fighting was reported; Japanese communications to Ichang were in danger of total disruption by the entry into Itu and the earlier fall of Chihkiang, itself 35 miles below Ichang.

More than half the 4000 Japanese troops surrounded near Itu were officially declared wiped out.

520 Russian Planes Raid Nazi-Held Orel

Single Craft Lost
Attacking Town
South of Moscow

By the Associated Press

London (Saturday), June 5.—A raid by 520 Russian bombers on German-held Orel, below Moscow, in which it was asserted that only a single Soviet plane was lost was reported last night by the Moscow radio, while the midnight communiqué of the Soviet command again mentioned no action of consequence anywhere on the Russian land front.

The communiqué, as broadcast by the Moscow radio and recorded here by the Soviet monitor, was routine in tone and made no mention of the Velikie Luki sector between Smolensk and Velikie Luki west of Moscow, where the German radio earlier had reported that a strong Russian offensive action was under way.

This German account declared that three Russian infantry divisions and a reinforced tank brigade, perhaps a total of 50,000 men, had attacked repeatedly, and conceded a breakthrough behind the main German defenses although implying that this success was not exploited.

The thrust, said the broadcast, had been made in "an attempt to clear the way for the Russian rifle divisions, but in a counterattack the Russian riflemen were overrun."

The Soviet midday communiqué told only of inconsequential fighting around and announced the destruction overnight of 23 German planes in the Kuban section of the Caucasus.

A survey of official accounts showed that the Germans lost 162 planes out of 500 that attempted to raid Kursk Wednesday.

It was announced previously that 123 German craft had been destroyed over Kursk in one of the biggest air battles of the war.

A correspondent for Red Star, the army newspaper, said the Germans attempted an elaborate new plan of approach in the attack on Kursk.

Wings of Death

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, June 4.—American bombers kept the Italian outpost of Pantelleria under a day-long assault yesterday, climaxing a week in which allied warships shelled the rock-ribbed island four times and air units pounded it ceaselessly in addition to plastering Naples with block-buster bombs. All this was accomplished without a single Allied loss.

In new attacks demonstrating the growing Allied superiority of both sea and air, British naval craft followed up shattering aerial bombardments of Pantelleria Monday and Tuesday nights by shelling the island Wednesday night and again Thursday morning, it was announced officially today.

While the R. A. F. was hammering the fortress island Tuesday night, British Wellingtons roared to the Italian mainland and dumped 4000 and 2000-pound bombs on the docks and industrial area at Naples, already punished severely in recent daylight raids by flying Fortresses.

Heavy Monsters Battering

R. A. F. Boston bombers joined American Mitchell and Marauder bombers and Warhawk and Lightning fighters in yesterday's continuation of the heaviest nonstop battering ever dealt an enemy stronghold in the Mediterranean theater of war.

Thursday's shelling of Pantelleria by British warships was the fourth since Sunday night and the fifth since the island was brought into the devastating offensive against the island stepping-stones at Mussolini's front door.

Duplicating their double assault of earlier in the week, the warships stood off and hurled shell after shell at the tiny island situated midway between Tunisia and Sicily. Italian shore batteries, apparently weak against the island, were not called.

Warime Action

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The House yesterday approved sweeping restrictions against strikes in any war industry and flatly outlawed any walkout in a Government-owned plant.

The vote was 231 to 141. Passage sent the general antistrike measure to the Senate, which had passed a much milder bill.

The Senate immediately named conferees, headed by Senate Judiciary Chairman Frederick Van Nuys. Van Nuys predicted conference action next week, and final enactment of many House bill provisions.

Overriding leadership efforts to confine action largely to the present mine crisis, House Republicans formed a coalition with Southern Democrats led by Virginia Representative Howard Smith. Together they pledged to gather on the House floor a measure only slightly less drastic than the ironclad Military Committee bill.

In addition to criminal penalties against leaders of walkouts in Government-owned plants, aimed squarely at the mine strike, the House bill required 30 days strike notice from all unions, and a Government-supervised secret ballot of workers, before a strike could be called.

The bill armed the WLB with statutory power to intervene in any labor dispute, force witnesses to appear and produce papers, and to order an additional 60-day "cooling off" period while the board considered the case.

Other provisions:

Withhold National Labor Relations and LaGuardia Act benefits from violators of strike notice and ballot provisions for one year; subject violators to civil suits for damages.

Provide $5000 fines and 1-year jail sentences for instigating or aiding a strike in Government-owned operations, without punishing the individual strikers.

Require all labor organizations involved in war work to register with the NLRB, filing data on membership, dues, initiation fees, salaries and bonuses paid officers and other information.

Prohibit labor unions from making political contributions in elections for Federal office, invoking Corrupt Practices Act penalties up to $5000 for violations.

Forbid any member of the WLB from participating in any decision in which he has a direct or "pecuniary" interest.

The last provision was added to the bill at the last minute on See LABOR, Page 4, Column 1.

Tomato Juice Point Value Cut From 5 to 3 Units Tomorrow

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

The Office of Price Administration yesterday lowered the point value of tomato juice, cutting the blue coupon price of a No. 2 can from 5 to 3 points.

The cut is effective tomorrow and represents the second big decrease in the product, which was up to 12 points on May 1. Despite the first point value drop, tomato juice sales have been much less than expected, OPA said.

All vegetable juice combinations containing 70 per cent or more of tomato juice will be reduced from 4 to 2 points a pound at the same time.

These are the only changes in point values to be made for processed foods this month, OPA declared, unless some "unforeseen emergency" develops. Officials have been aiming at a point valuation that will remain steady from month to month to encourage an even expenditure of coupons.

Meantime the food pricing divisions of OPA worked frantically to obtain some price formula for fresh vegetables, the runaway prices of which are a constant source of embarrassment to the embattled agency.

Although summer crops and victory gardens will bring a seasonal decrease from which OPA will benefit, only a few fresh foods have begun to decline in price and the next cost-of-living index will reflect the general upward swing that continued from April 15 to May 15.

Price ceilings on fresh fish, promised and worked out weeks ago, have not yet been released—causing some observers to believe the agency wants to wait until its food subsidy plans are completed before announcement of any other program likely to bring complaints from a food trade group.

U. S. Casualties On Attu 'Low,' Knox Reports

342 Yanks Killed,
Against 1791 Japs;
Not One Ship Lost

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

American reconquest of Attu Island was accomplished without loss of a single United States ship and, with "surprisingly low" casualties—342 men killed compared with well over 1700 Japs slain, Secretary Knox disclosed yesterday.

Proclaiming the Attu campaign concluded, Knox said that Navy Seabees and Army air engineers are already at work on the partially completed airfield there "so kindly started by the Japs." Other fields also may be developed on the island, he said.

Asked if Attu will make a good bomber base against the Japanese, Knox replied:

Strategic Value

"The weather is against anything being very good up there, but it will be very valuable strategically. I suspect it will be very embarrassing to the Japs on Kiska."

Kiska is the only island in the Aleutians now held by the enemy. There has been some speculation as to whether American forces would now move against this base or bomb and starve the enemy troops there into impotence.

Listing American casualties in the fighting ashore on Attu through midnight, June 1, the Navy declared that United States casualties were 342 killed, 1135 wounded and 58 missing.

Japanese casualties to date are 1791 known dead (by count of bodies) and 11 prisoners. Many more enemy troops are believed to have been killed by bombs and artillery fire, but were buried or cremated by their forces.

A few small bands of Japs still are at large on the rugged island, the Navy stated, although there is See KNOX, Page 2, Column 5.

Stalin's Reply To Roosevelt Kept Secret

President Pleased
By Soviet Accord,
Withholds Details

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt gave every evidence of pleasure yesterday over the reply Premier Josef Stalin sent to his recent letter, but he still kept secret the nature of their exchange.

Asked about it at a press conference, Mr. Roosevelt replied only that the understanding and accord between him and the Soviet leader is excellent.

This remark was delivered so smilingly, and with such high good humor, however, that there seemed no question but that the exchange of communications had been highly satisfactory from the Chief Executive's standpoint.

Much Conjecture

Mr. Roosevelt referred to the Russian leader as Marshal Stalin. If the use of the military title meant the President was thinking at the moment of military matters—and Stalin's role as commander in chief of the Russian armies—there was nothing else to confirm it.

Conjecture concerning the letters, and it has been purely that, has ranged over a wide field. Among the guesses have been that:

The President advised Stalin of British-American plans for an invasion of the European continent.

The President asked Stalin to a joint conference some time in the future with him and Prime Minister Churchill.

Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador to Moscow, took the President's letter to Stalin last month and arrived back last night with the Russian leader's reply.

There have been reports that Admiral William H. Standley, the present Ambassador to Russia, is See STALIN, Page 2, Column 4.

Ickes Prevails
On U. M. W. Chief
To Halt Crippling
Coal Field Strike

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, yielded to the United States Government yesterday and told the country's coal miners, through the U. M. W. policy committee, to go back to work on Monday morning.

The coal mine strike crisis ended suddenly after Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes sent Lewis a letter stating, "As operator of the coal mines on behalf of the United States Government, I expect that you will direct the members of the United Mine Workers of America to return to work on Monday, June 7."

The time had been selected by President Roosevelt in a four-paragraph "back to work" order Thursday night which was directed to the miners over Lewis' head.

Prompt Reply

Lewis replied promptly: "I have your letter of June 4th. I have no power to direct. I shall, however, recommend to the policy committee of the United Mine Workers of America that it direct the mine workers to return to work on Monday, June 7."

Explaining his recommendation to the policy committee, Lewis took occasion to denounce the War Labor Board again, asserting, "By malicious propaganda, these little strutting men of the WLB have sought to place upon the miners the responsibility for this stoppage, which rests actually on their own shoulders."

Lewis' letter provided some vestige of a face-saver—recognition that he is in effect the leader of the country's miners—Government officials were satisfied with his capitulation because it came without the making of any concessions while the strike was in progress and without his reinstating the strike threat by setting another deadline for conclusion of negotiations.

Wires to Go Out Today

Since the start of collective bargaining negotiations March 10, they have been carried on under some deadline, the expiration of which carried with it an inevitable threat to strike because of the U. M. W.'s "no contract, no work" policy.

However, observers pointed out that it was still possible for Lewis to set another deadline in telegraphing "back to work" instructions to the miners.

K. C. Adams, U. M. W. spokesman, announced that the policy committee unanimously approved See COAL, Page 5, Column 1.

ened by the "round-the-clock aerial bombardment, made a mild show of returning the fire. As in the other attacks, however, the warships suffered neither damage nor casualties.

The R.A.F.'s night raiders carried out their assaults on both Pantelleria and Naples without encountering any enemy fighters.

Plants, Buildings Hit
Today's belated announcement of the Naples raid said, "Many bursts were seen among plants and port buildings." In addition to the block-busters, the Wellington bombers dropped other types of high explosives on the important Italian shipping center.

(A Moscow broadcast heard by C. B. S. quoted Swiss dispatches as saying all foreign newspaper correspondents, including those of Axis countries, had been forbidden to enter Naples. Correspondents of neutral countries are allowed only in Rome and Milan, the broadcast added.)

Several fires and many hits in the dock area were reported by R. A. F. fliers who participated in the two night attacks on Pantelleria.

The American daylight bombers were said to have scored numerous hits on the island's military establishments yesterday and to have caused large explosions.

The one airfield on the island, reported to have been fortified heavily by Premier Mussolini, is believed to have been put completely out of use as a result of the nonstop attacks.

Island Has No Respite
The island has had no respite from the terrific aerial onslaught since the conclusion of the Tunisian campaign, nearly a month ago.

A Cairo communique announced that R. A. F. fighters, on a daily sweep over the Aegean Sea yesterday, set fire to a small sailing vessel.

(The Berlin radio broadcast a propaganda agency dispatch from Rome saying the death toll in the May 28 raid by American bombers on Leghorn, Italy, had risen to 240 dead and 600 injured. The ship-building center and submarine base 160 miles north of Rome was attacked by nearly 100 Flying Fortress and Liberators.)

The Germans also claimed that Nazi bombers had damaged one steamer and set fire to another in attacking an Allied convoy off Cap Bon, Tunisia, yesterday.)

Plasma Bank To Visit Greenbelt School June 21

Mrs. Joseph Rogers, war service chairman of the Greenbelt Women's Club, announced last night that arrangements have been made to have the mobile unit of the Army-Navy Red Cross plasma bank visit Greenbelt on June 21, from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. The unit will be stationed at the Greenbelt Elementary School.

"We are fortunate," said Mrs. Rogers, "in having the blood bank come out to Greenbelt. The fact that they are coming out during this gasoline shortage in this area indicates the vital importance of this work as part of our war program."

A minimum of 135 blood donors are needed to make their contribution to the war effort in this form and all prospective contributors are requested to make appointments for June 21 with Mrs. Joseph Rogers, 2-C Eastway; Mrs. H. Hall, 28-B Ridge Road; or Mrs. Robert Porter, 4-A Southway Road.

Giraud, De Gaulle Join in Broadcast Over Algiers Radio

By Edward Kennedy

Associated Press Staff Writer

Algiers, June 4.—Gens. Charles de Gaulle and Henri Giraud, addressing the French people by radio tonight, stressed the unity of the French war effort and called on them to support the new French committee for national liberation. Both Giraud and De Gaulle spoke on the same broadcast over the Algiers radio, which is controlled by the Giraudists. Giraud's address, which was delivered first, was heard clearly in London, but De Gaulle's speech, which followed, was jammed so much that it could not be recorded by the Associated Press in London.—Editor's note.]

Their broadcast followed a long session of the committee which was reported to have resulted in a new compromise between the two leaders in which Giraud will continue as commander in chief of the French army and in turn will make several concessions to De Gaulle.

Sources whose names must be withheld said these concessions included the replacing of some high officers by generals from De Gaulle's Fighting French forces such as Paul Le Gentilhomme, Edouard Gene de Larknat, Marie Louis Koenig and Jacques Leclerc.

"Crush the Enemy"
Giraud's command, however, will be strictly a headquarters job, it was understood, with no extension of his activities to the field. In his broadcast speech, De Gaulle said the "only issue is the crushing of the enemy." Giraud declared that "unity is a victory for us; for the Germans it is a defeat."

De Gaulle asserted that "our life is at stake, but France has more cards to play—the loyalty and bravery of Frenchmen and our colonial population throughout the empire."

Said Giraud: "All the fighting men of France are grouped now on a single road."

De Gaulle Asks Support
De Gaulle, in calling on all French people to support the newly formed committee, said it was charged with the heaviest duties and animated by the firmest resolution. He said it was leading the fight "not only for the liberty of France but for the life of every one of our children handed over to the enemy."

Giraud said that "Tunis has already wiped out the stigma of defeat."

He denounced the "little handful of traitors which deliberately played into the enemy's hand" but asserted that among the French were many whose failure was "not so much to do their duty as to know where their duty lay."

Giraud paid tribute to De Gaulle and those who had followed him to Britain and to the soldiers of Fighting France in the desert and elsewhere.

"But there are others," he said, "other soldiers and other leaders faithful to discipline who obeyed orders and who waited."

Many Fight for France
These, he said, had fought against the German armistice commissions, had hidden arms and ammunition, and when the Allied landing came had joined in the fight and eventually whole German divisions surrendered to them. Continuing, Giraud declared:

"And there is the army of all France—hostages and saboteurs—an army waiting to rise up. And there is the army of prisoners—my old comrades—who keep faith, hope and confidence in their hearts." Honor is due all those who are fighting for France in any way, Giraud said.

Both leaders emphasized the temporary life of the committee, saying it would turn its functions over to the French people when the liberation comes.

Catroux Assumes Power
Marcel Peyrouton handed over his powers as governor general of Algiers to Catroux this afternoon.

Previously, De Gaulle had granted Peyrouton's request to serve as a captain in the colonial infantry and had assigned him to Syria.

The newly formed committee also was to consider the dismissal of additional officials on De Gaulle's ouster lists, notably the case of Pierre Bolsson, governor of French West Africa. It was considered likely that he would be replaced by Rene Pleven, vice president of De Gaulle's now defunct national committee in London.

Mandel Dead In German War Prison

By the Associated Press

New York, June 4.—Georges Mandel, the French cabinet minister who was popularly believed to have more secret information on French politicians than any man in the world, was reported dead in a German prison, an N. B. C. dispatch from Switzerland said tonight.

Mandel, who would have been 58 tomorrow, was doubly hated by the Germans as a Jew and as a strong French politician who long opposed them. He was among those government leaders who left France to set up a government in Africa shortly before the armistice in 1940 and were turned back aboard their ship, the Massilia.

Ruthless Political Foe

The government of Marshal Pétain clapped him in jail along with Gen. Maurice Gamelin and former Premier Leon Blum and Paul Reynaud. Never brought to trial on the "war guilt" charges prepared by the Vichy government, Mandel finally fell into German hands when the occupation line was overrun last November and he was transferred to Germany.

A French political figure since the World War, Mandel was a severe, thin-lipped, secretive man known for his inevitable high, stiff collar, old-fashioned clothes and determination.

He was hated by many because he was a ruthless political foe, a man with a biting wit and an amazing memory for facts which he assiduously collected.

Naval Academy Will Stage Drills Today

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., June 4.—The United States Naval Academy and the City of Annapolis developed an air of lively activity as last-minute plans were completed for the opening of "June Week" tomorrow morning.

Although traditional ceremonies will be practically the same as in past years, the full program, in comparison, will be somewhat curtailed because of the war.

The general public will not be admitted to the "yard" to witness the colorful events. Only the guests of officers and midshipmen will be given tickets of admission, academy officials said.

Drill events in sailing, gunnery, physical training, seamanship and navigation will start the "June Week" exercises tomorrow at 9:30 a. m. Two hours later the presentation of athletic and extra-curricular awards will be issued in "Tecumseh Court"—site of the famous statue of the Indian warrior who represents success in examinations to the midshipmen.

The remainder of the opening day ceremonies will be devoted to a band concert, the midshipmen's orchestra and Glee Club recital, and a dance for winners of the athletic "N" award and a hop for the first and third classes.

Chaplain W. N. Thomas of the Naval Academy will deliver the sermon on Sunday, June 6, to the members of the graduating class late Sunday afternoon a vesper service will be held in the chapel for the midshipmen.

On Worden Field, drill grounds for the Naval Academy, the regimental parade will be held, Monday, June 7. At this time the presentation of prizes will be made to midshipmen who have made outstanding records in scholastic and other fields of endeavor. Rear Admiral J. R. Beardsall, superintendent of the academy, will entertain the guests at a reception in the evening.

The climax of ceremonies, other than graduation proper, will take place when the color presentation is made during the formal regimental parade Tuesday.

A farewell ball for all classes of midshipmen will be held Tuesday night.

D. C. Attorney, Now WAAC Officer, Glad to Serve War Post

"I was always sorry that I had to miss the last war so I enlisted in this one the first chance I had."

Such was the explanation of Capt. Mary Agnes Brown for trading, last July 20, 11 years' legal experience for her current position with the WAAC as staff director of the Eighth Service Command.

Further than Capt. Brown that, she's bent duty. "I want to be right where the hostilities are, as soon as possible." And she acknowledged yesterday that her recent trip from headquarters in Dallas, Tex., to her native city has prepared her for any and all demands which overseas duties might make.

The hazards and discomforts of wartime cross-country traveling, climaxed by Washington in the throes of a heat wave, are somewhat equivalent to the Marines' famed "boot" training, contended Captain Brown, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer J.

Brown of 4606 Fifteenth Street Northwest.

After seven hours' delay, she arrived here a few days ago just in time to receive an alumni achievement award from George Washington University "for notable achievement in law and for conspicuous service to the university."

She studied nights at the university, first while secretary to the medical director of the Veterans' Administration and then as attorney in the solicitors' office there, and received over a 15-year period, A. B., L.L. B. and S. J. D. degrees.

It was her first trip home since December, when she returned here for the first of what may be a series of alumni achievement citations from Central High School.

That award came two days after she had been promoted to captain, a rank held by only three dozen other WAACs in this country.

Commenting on her present work, Captain Brown, who last year was president of the Women's Bar Association here, noted that her legal training had prepared her for any administrative position, legal or not, the WAAC might assign her. "It doesn't make me less of a lawyer," she noted, "and I'll have plenty of time to practice when we've finished this war."

Italy Tensely Waits Invasion By Allies
By E. C. Daniel
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, June 4.—While Italy tensely awaited an invasion by Allied forces, a Berlin broadcast told its overseas listeners today that the German army was "preparing for battles on the largest possible scale."

The Algiers radio said the Italian government had ordered military trials for deserters from Italian war factories, Reuters reported.

London newspapers continued to trumpet the Allied threat to Italy's islands and mainland. Afternoon edition headlines were:

"Tension in Italy at Peak"—Evening Standard, quoting the Algiers radio.

"More 'Invasion' Ships Are Massing"—Evening News, quoting dispatches from La Linea which reported at least 137 ships have left Gibraltar during the past few days.

"Italy: We Mass For New Blow"—Evening Star, quoting U. S. War Secretary Henry L. Stimson.

The German general staff is keeping its plans secret, the German overseas radio commentator said, but he asserted that several new divisions had been created and that the production of arms in Germany was exceeding expectations.

"So we can conclude," he said, "that Germany is preparing for the coming battles on the largest possible scale."

Aussies in Mediterranean
Alexandria, Egypt, June 4 (P)—Warships of the Royal Australian Navy again are operating in the Mediterranean, it was disclosed today, after a period in which they have concentrated operations in the Pacific following Japan's entry into the war.

The warships were not identified, but the crews were described as among the most experienced in the Australian navy, with service at Singapore, the Netherlands East Indies and other parts of the Pacific.

United States, Greek, Dutch and Indian naval units also are operating with the Royal Navy in the Mediterranean and the French squadron at Alexandria only recently joined the Allied cause.

Not a Sailor Lost
"This fortunate outcome cannot always be anticipated in amphibious operations which are well known to be the most difficult and dangerous in all modern warfare."

Secretary Knox amplified this statement by declaring that the Navy did not lose a single man in any of the operations at Attu, as far as reports show. This includes 300 "Seabees"—base construction engineers—who went ashore. No ships were lost during any of the operations, he said, though one merchant ship went aground and was refloated.

Asked about this, Mr. Roosevelt said neither the State Department nor the White House had received a resignation from Standley.

Meanwhile, Chairman Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, of the Senate Military Committee called yesterday for an early determination by President Roosevelt of Russian and British postwar demands in conquered territories.

In a lengthy speech to the Senate, Reynolds suggested an early meeting of President Roosevelt with Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin "to settle now the issues that are in the minds of the people of America and the conquered countries."

Gates' Tour Over Pacific Drive Aimed to Bag Jap Air Bases

The Navy's top ranking air official declared yesterday the Pacific war now is a "battle for air bases" and hinted American moves to capture Japanese bases may be in the making.

Artemus L. Gates, Assistant Secretary of the Navy of Air, who has just returned from a 26-day 27,000-mile trip through the Pacific, told reporters that "air power is just scratching the surface" in its effect on the war.

"Our air forces in the Pacific are continually increasing," he stated. "And our concept of naval warfare is continually changing, due to greater use of aircraft carriers, more and more planes in service and planes with greater range coming along."

Top Post Airmen Needed
A reporter asked Gates if his statement the trend of war seems to be a battle for air bases meant we are "going after" some island bases now held by the Japs.

Gates said his trip definitely confirmed one thing in his mind—that "we should have more aviators in top positions." He said he was going to see Admiral Ernest J. King, the fleet commander in chief and chief of naval operations, about this.

Bombed On Trip
The Air Secretary, who was a naval flier in the last war, visited virtually all Allied bases in the South Pacific, as well as bases in Australia and New Guinea. He admitted to having been "rather mildly bombed" at one stop on his trip, but did not go into details.

Successful sea operations are only possible with an effective correlation of both air and surface forces, Gates stated. He said he was particularly impressed with the high degree of cooperation between the services in joint operations.

Asked about performance of the Corwin, new Navy fighter plane, the air chief said "there is no question about it being superior to the Zero."

Pro-Ally General Rules Argentina

Diplomats' View

Argentina May Join War on Axis

By Richard G. Massock
Associated Press Staff Writer

The belief prevailed in diplomatic quarters last night that there is a strong possibility the army coup d'état in Buenos Aires will bring Argentina, last Latin-American holdout, to the United Nations' side in the war.

Many observers expect a diplomatic break between Argentina and the Axis powers, if not an outright declaration of war.

The situation was described privately in Government quarters as "looking pretty good."

United States recognition of the new regime seems assured, assuming that it displays a readiness to cooperate in hemispheric defense.

U. S. Policy Clarified

The so-called nonrecognition policy has not been in effect since 1930, said a qualified observer, who could not be named. This policy, applied in the days when Henry L. Stimson was Secretary of State, denied recognition to any regime that had overthrown a government by force. But since 1930, it was said, the United States has recognized any government that demonstrated:

1. Its ability to maintain order.
2. That it was in effective control of the government.

3. It recognizes and is carrying out international obligations.

State Department officials withheld comment pending a complete report on the coup that put War Minister Pedro Ramirez in power. However, Secretary of the Navy Knox, asked for comment at a press conference, said, "It looks as if the pro-Axis administration down there has been unseated."

May Get Lend-Lease

Some diplomats viewed the Army's move in taking the Government out of the hands of President Ramon S. Castillo as probably intended to make Argentina eligible for lend-lease aid from the United States. Argentina would become eligible for such aid if she joined in defense of the Americas.

Argentine generals are reported to have eyed enviously the new tanks and other weapons which Brazil and Chile have obtained through lend-lease.

Viewing the change in Buenos Aires as a straight army coup d'état, some observers here said it was too early to determine whether it would provide Argentina with a more democratic regime.

Gen. Pedro Ramirez, a career military man who was a leader in the revolt, has no particular political affiliations, so far as is known here. At various times Military Attaché in Berlin and Rome, his background connections have been closer to the Axis powers, if anything, than to the United States.

But Gen. Arturo Rawson, who actually led the troops in the coup, is regarded as democratic in his tendencies. Furthermore, reports that Argentine crowds hailed the "triumphant revolution" with shouts "viva democracia" were considered highly significant.

Whether Castillo, regarded here as a stubborn man, would relinquish his office was a doubtful factor in appraising the situation. But moderate optimism was the keynote.

18 Tons of Allied Bombs Hit Guinea As Clouds Break

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Saturday), June 5 (AP)—Resuming an aerial offensive which had been stalled by bad weather, Allied heavy bombers yesterday dropped 18 tons of bombs on Wewak, New Guinea, the high command announced.

This brought to 174 tons the total of bombs dropped in seven raids on Wewak and Lae.

Ranging 750 miles above Australia to Babe in the MacCluer Gulf of Dutch New Guinea, medium bombers started fires which could be seen for 40 miles.

Below there on the Aroe Islands, a Japanese float plane was destroyed and two damaged.

The island of Timor, a frequent target recently, was raided by medium bombers which struck at night at Koepang and Lautem.

Gen. Rawson Leads Revolt; Castillo Flees to Uruguay

lonia said all of Castillo's ministers were aboard the Drummond at that port 110 miles across the Rio de la Plata from Buenos Aires.

Crowds shouted "long live democracy" at the appearance of General Rawson and his troops.

Some rioting occurred in the center of the city, where crowds smashed trolley cars, burned buses and stoned buildings which they associated with the Castillo regime.

But most of Buenos Aires' residents did not even know that Castillo had fled or that a military regime had replaced the man whose government was the only one in America still maintaining relations with Germany, Italy and Japan.

One soldier and 14 civilians were reported killed in the only clash accompanying the revolt.

The 14 were aboard a bus which was caught in a cross-fire between the troops and forces which put up a brief show of resistance at the Naval Engineering School in the suburbs.

Castillo's war minister, Gen. Pedro Ramirez, joined Rawson in the revolt. The two are old friends and military classmates.

When General Ramirez went over to his opponents, Castillo named Gen. Rodolfo Marquez as war minister and told him to crush the rebellion. But Marquez's troops refused to obey him.

Votes to End Fraud

General Rawson was said to have made General Ramirez, Gen. Juan Giovannelli, and an unidentified naval officer members of his military council which was pledged to remove disunity among the Argentines, as well as the fraud and "moral corruption" which Rawson said Castillo's regime had fostered.

Airplanes were reported to have dropped proclamations in which Rawson said Argentina would collaborate fully in the Pan-American war front.

There was no direct word from the general to this effect, but Radical (liberal) Party members said they favored his movement. The Radicals long have sought to swing Argentina into the United Nations' camp.

General Rawson's decree declaring martial law said "I feel it an unavoidable duty that he, who is assuming at these moments the responsibility for the destinies of a nation, forestall any movement of trouble or disorder in the public peace, or attempts against private life and properties."

The new leader of Argentina was made cavalry commander last year when Ramirez left the same post to join Castillo's cabinet. He was born in Santiago Del Estero in 1884. He is a member of a distinguished family and his father was an army officer.

When he faced crowds beneath Government House balcony today, Rawson told them that his movement was "without any political leaning," and was aimed only at guaranteeing "the safety of our people and our Nation."

He told them the former regime had failed to respect "our institutions and culture."

Roberto Repetto, president of the supreme court, had not acted on recognition of the new government, although previously it was indicated that he would.

It had first been reported that General Rawson and Gen. Pedro Ramirez, Castillo's minister of war who broke with the conservative President, were the apparent leaders of the revolt.

Until tonight it had not been clear who was the dominant figure in the uprising against the Castillo Government which had been the only one in all America to maintain relations with Germany, Italy, and Japan.

An earlier report said Rawson was minister of war under a new military council headed by Ramirez. The council was said to include Gen. Juan Giovannelli and a naval officer not immediately identified.

General Rawson also issued a written statement declaring that "moral corruption" marked the Castillo regime which was "harmful to the true interests of the country, and prevented an economic upsurge."

Rawson's statement even said that "communism" threatened the country, but amid the general confusion observers said one fact stood out: Argentine army leaders have been impressed by the country's failure to get financial and technical aid because of Castillo's foreign policy which kept Argentina a holdout in the Pan-American front against the Axis.

(A Montevideo dispatch said the failure of Washington negotiations.

Justice Laws Grants Viereck Trial Delay

In order to allow defense counsel more time in which to prepare their case Justice Bolitho J. Laws of District Court announced yesterday that he had postponed the trial of George Sylvester Viereck, charged with failing to register with the State Department as an agent of the German government, from June 7 to 18.

Convicted at his first trial the Nazi agent won a reversal of the verdict by the United States Supreme Court on technical grounds. The new indictment was returned several weeks ago.

last year when Argentina hoped to get military equipment through lend-lease had deeply impressed military circles in the country.

The troops were greeted not only by popular shouts as they entered the capital but also a special edition of the newspaper Noticias Graficas bearing the headline: "Triumph of Revolution."

From his first refuge in the Rio Santiago naval base, Castillo gave notice of his intention to resist the military regime.

Broadcasts Message

A message from him was broadcast to the Argentines, asking that they obey Gen. Rodolfo Marquez, whom Castillo had named chief of the "forces of repression" in an effort to put down the revolt.

However, Marquez resigned as head of the repressive forces in mid-afternoon, explaining the troops would not obey him.

(Gen. Rodolfo Marquez, appointed by Castillo as war minister and ordered to quell the revolt, was reported to have been killed in a clash at the President's summer home at Olivos, the International News Service said. Dr. Miguel Culaciati, former minister of interior, also was reported to have been shot and killed last night.)

Castillo's message had said Marquez was head of the "legal forces," the refugee President's message added:

"The government has been forced to transfer its seat to a navy warship."

"It is ready to assure the stability of national institutions."

"I will not consent to the installation of a government by force which does not respect the popular will of the country."

A spokesman said the Navy was remaining neutral in the situation. General Ramirez, was Castillo's minister of war. He is considered a rightist, but General Rawson, who headed the troops which marched into the capital from the army base at Campo de Mayo, 15 miles outside Buenos Aires, is known for his democratic ideas and his sympathy for the cause of the United Nations.

Castillo promptly deposed Ramirez, and all Argentine radio stations interrupted their programs to broadcast Castillo's proclamation on this.

(A dispatch from Santiago, Chile, said the military forces had issued a proclamation saying that Castillo's government had "defrauded the people," and that the military would "fight for real unity of the Argentine people," and "a true union of the Americas.")

(Reports from Buenos Aires radio recorded in Montevideo, Uruguay, across the Rio de la Plata from Argentina, told of the clash at the Naval Engineering School.)

Light Artillery Hauled Up

(The revolting troops hauled up light artillery to overcome resistance at the school whose occupants surrendered soon after midday, and in Buenos Aires itself Police Chief Domingo Martinez surrendered his station to an infantry regiment "to save bloodshed.")

Soon after the troops marched into the city, General Ramirez entered the Government House in downtown Buenos Aires. Deputies of the Radical (Liberal) Party, which long has fought Castillo's international policy, were in session there at the time.

Leaders of this party said later that they had no links with the movement, but appeared to favor the revolt which occurred on the day the Conservatives had planned to declare their presidential candidate for the September elections in succession to Castillo.

Robustiano Patron Costas, Senate president, was to have been this candidate, and he said bluntly that the revolution was "aimed against me and I know it."

From his upriver gunboat seat, Castillo sent a telegram to Supreme Court President Repetto, saying: "I inform your excellency that my government has transferred its seat to a river squadron of the navy where I hoisted the flag of the rebellion in chief in face of the rebellion which will be duly punished."

Castillo's futile sacking of Ramirez and his appointment of General Marquez failed to check the sweeping insurgent control of key capital posts.

The troops were cheered uproariously by shouting crowds, and then Buenos Aires relapsed into a comparative calm.

Riots Quickly Quelled

Some disorderly elements started riots downtown. They broke window panes in streetcars, set some of the cars afire, and also tried to burn the headquarters of the transportation corporation which had taken over private transportation facilities.

Police restored the situation quickly.

The marine guard which had been placed around the Government House after Castillo's flight at dawn was replaced by army guards upon their arrival from Campo de Mayo.

(A Santiago dispatch said the family of Enrique Ruiz Guinazu, Castillo's foreign minister, had taken refuge in the Chilean Embassy in Buenos Aires after the rest of Castillo's government had boarded the river gunboat.

(Passengers arriving in Montevideo, 120 miles east of Buenos Aires, on the regular morning plane from the Argentine capital were surprised by news of the revolt. They had not noticed anything unusual when they left at 9:30 a. m.)

(The Argentine Embassy in Montevideo declined comment, saying "the situation is too confused.")

The first inkling that anything was afoot occurred at 2 a. m. today when rumors began circulating that there was unusual activity at Campo de Mayo.

Shortly afterward, all troops were ordered to remain in their barracks in Buenos Aires.

Near 5 a. m. Castillo drove to Government House where he conferred with some of his ministers and other officials, apparently making the decision to flee.

As this conference was taking place cavalry and artillery contingents led by General Rawson were moving on the capital. When they reached Buenos Aires they divided into several groups and went on to seize control of official centers.

Today's revolution was the first major uprising in Argentina since the military, led by Gen. Jose Uriburu, overthrew the regime of President Hipolito Yrigoyen, the country's last radical President, in 1930.

Election Fraud Charged

Uriburu was succeeded by reactionary regimes, culminating in that of Castillo who dictated neutrality policy and imposed a state of siege to defend it.

The radicals, or liberals, have declared that the government used its control of election machinery to manipulate elections and insure its continuance in power. This was the discouraging handicap which liberal elements faced as they prepared to fight the government coalition in next September's presidential election.

Castillo became acting President in 1940 when the elected executive, Roberto Ortiz, a moderate who set out to unify the country still split since the 1930 revolt, was stricken ill and was unable to exercise his duties.

Ortiz had insisted, upon honest elections and abandonment of government interventions, in which Castillo when he was minister of justice and minister of interior figured in several provinces. Most of these moves were taken for the announced purpose of keeping order.

Upon the resignation of Ortiz, just a short time before his death in June, 1942, Castillo advanced to the Presidency.

Railroad Pay Boost Favored By Roosevelt

The possibility arose yesterday that President Roosevelt would approve payment of time and a half over 40 hours to one million railroad workers in addition to granting them an 8-cent-an-hour general wage increase approved by a Presidential emergency panel.

The railroad workers—affiliated with 15 nonoperating railroad unions—are now paid straight time rates up to 48 hours because of their exemption from the wage-hour law.

Boost May Reach 14 Cents

The panel stated that payment of time and a half would be equivalent to a 6 cents an hour general increase, indicating that a boost of at least 14 cents may be in store.

President Roosevelt disclosed that he had written railway management and labor suggesting they discuss the question of paying time and a half to the railroad workers. The panel recommendation must be approved by the President.

It was understood that the question was raised by George M. Harrison, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, in conference with the President after Harrison objected that the 8 cents award was insufficient.

Asked at his press conference whether the management and labor brotherhoods were prepared to settle the wage dispute on the basis of the board's report, the President replied with a discussion of the overtime feature.

Diesel Issue Looms

He said he had written John J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, and Harrison on this question asking them to look into it. He made the observation that he did not believe it equitable for a man to be working in the Grand Central depot without getting overtime when a man working in a department store around the corner is getting overtime.

It was also disclosed by the White House that the President had suggested a joint management-labor conference to discuss an emergency board's decision on the question of manning Diesel locomotives and the basis of pay for engineers working on them.

amendment by Representative Gwynne (Republican) of Iowa.

The coalition drive to pass a bill with "teeth" squeezed out of the picture an Administration substitute for the bill drawn by House Majority Whip Ramspeck. Ramspeck never had a chance to even offer his substitute, modeled along Senator Connally bill lines, but his principal proposals were blanketed into the much broader Smith amendment, adopted 170 to 113.

Smith, author of an even more stringent bill that passed the House 18 months ago, chose a Republican substitute by Representative Harness of Indiana as a vehicle. The Harness substitute, first amendment offered to the committee bill, was in a favored parliamentary position. Approval of it foreclosed any further House action.

By agreement with Harness, Smith offered broadening amendments, restoring many of the provisions of the original committee bill. To insure its adoption, the Virginian eliminated some of the restrictions labor had most vehemently opposed, bans on jurisdictional and sympathy strikes, intimidation and violent picketing and antistrike injunctions.

Ban on Closed Shop Out

The last item Smith reluctantly drew from his bill was a ban on WLB closed shop orders. To remove this it was necessary for the House first to vote down the Smith amendment, which it did by a 204-to-73 vote. Smith immediately re-offered his amendment, without the closed shop ban. In that form it was passed.

Other efforts to alter the measure met with uniform success. Representative Thompson (Democrat) of Texas tried to knock out the 30-day strike notice and secret ballot provision. He failed on a voice vote. Representative Hancock (Republican) of New York was defeated 156 to 83 in an attempt to eliminate the ban on political contributions. An effort by Representative Colmer (Democrat) of Mississippi to provide criminal penalties for "conspiracy" to strike against the Government failed, 181 to 83. A final move to recommit the bill by Representative Fenton (Republican) of Pennsylvania went down 175 to 103.

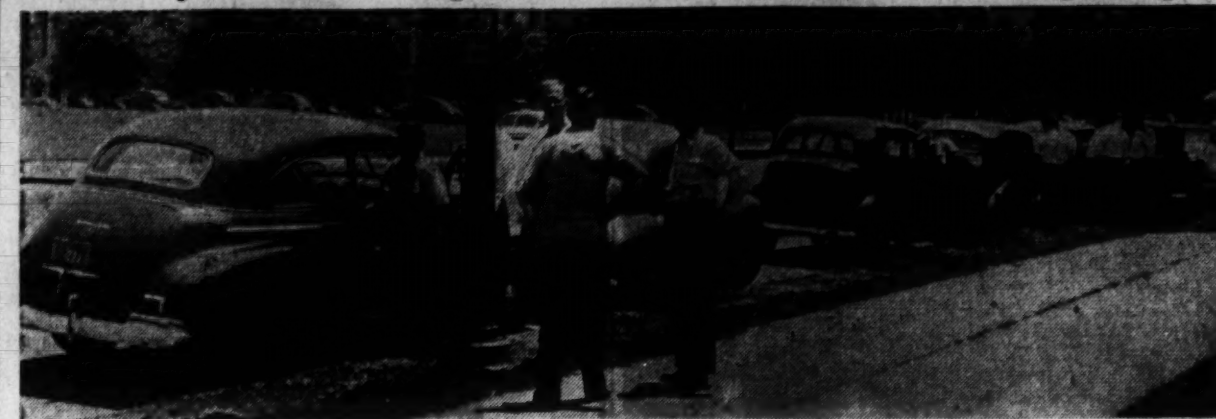

Vote Breakdown

On the passage vote, 131 Republicans joined with 100 Democrats to send the bill to the Senate. Only 48 Republican, 89 Democrats and 4 minority party members voted "No."

Denunciation of John L. Lewis enlivened both the House and Senate side debate. Senator Eastland (Democrat) of Mississippi told the Senate Lewis ought to be jailed, saying "Lewis' wrong is 100 times worse than crimes for which death is the penalty."

The House adjourned early without naming conferees, but the Senate did not wait. Senate conferees planned a preliminary meeting of their own group today. Besides Chairman Van Nuys, Senate managers will include Senator Connally (Democrat) of Texas, author of the original Senate measure; Senator Hatch (Democrat) of New Mexico; Senator Austin (Republican) of Vermont and Senator Danaher (Republican) of Connecticut.

Baltimore Strikers Use Gas in Journey to Picket WLB Here; OPA May Revoke Coupons of Some of Those Making Trip

NO RATION TROUBLES—Baltimore transit workers arrived yesterday to picket the Labor Department Building in 100 automobiles. They went back the same way. Mister, that took a lot of gas—more than you'll get in a long, long time to come. Some of them are shown here preparing to leave.

WLB Orders Packard Strike Be Ended

By the Associated Press

Detroit, June 4.—The National War Labor Board, in a strongly worded message, tonight called upon workers who left their jobs at Packard Motor Car Co. in a racial dispute to "resume production of vitally needed war material at once."

The action came after 90 per cent of the employees had ignored for a second day the back-to-work call of company and union officials and of local representatives of governmental agencies.

The WLB order, signed by Carl R. Scheller, deputy executive director of the Board in Washington, said:

"The critical war aid of our country demands that the production of vitally needed war material . . . be resumed at once."

Meanwhile, a meeting of the executive board of Packard Local 190, United Automobile Workers, C. I. O., called to consider the issuance of an ultimatum to the men to return to work Sunday or Monday on their regular shifts or face discipline by the union, broke up without a decision.

Crowds milled around all the gates of the plant throughout the day, but there was no disorder. There were no established picket lines.

A company spokesman said the walkout was in protest against upgrading to better jobs of three Negro workers on the final assembly line of aviation engines, while union leaders said the employees were not opposed to upgrading of Negroes but were against the mixing of white and Negro workers.

Boiler Workers Walk Out in New York
Dunkirk, N. Y., June 4 (AP).—About 200 employees of the plate and boiler shops of the American Locomotive Co.'s Dunkirk plant stopped work today in what a C. I. O. official said was an unauthorized walkout.

Ray McLaughlin, international representative of the C. I. O. United Steelworkers of America, said he did not know the cause of the stoppage and asserted he was attempting to persuade the workers to return to their jobs.

Plant Manager Herman Franck confirmed the walkout, but said he did not know why the men left the shops.

One of the strikers, who declined to be quoted by name, said the stoppage was a protest against a War Labor Board decision which, he asserted, granted pay increases to employees in higher wage brackets, but did not allow raises for common laborers.

'Society Burglar' Again Sentenced

After his second conviction on the 23-count indictment charging housebreaking and larceny, James P. Mitchell, 27, 1427 N Street Northwest, termed by the prosecution a "society burglar," was sentenced yesterday by Justice Bolitha J. Laws in District Court to serve from 1½ to 4½ years in prison.

The sentence was ordered to run consecutively with a previous sentence of from one to three years imposed by Justice Matthew F. McGuire after Mitchell's conviction on the first count of the indictment.

Arriving here in private cars with complete disregard for the gas shortage and nonessential driving bans, approximately half of the striking union employees of the Baltimore Transit Co. yesterday picketed the Department of Labor under a 90-degree noonday sun to protest WLB inaction in enforcing a directive against their company. They represented 1000 employees of the company who had been voluntarily idle since May 25 because transit officials had failed to obey a WLB order to reemploy 11 former workers—one of whom was dismissed for alleged drunkenness, the others supposedly for union activities. All hold membership in the Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees, A. F. L.

While company officials, their business 84 per cent of normal conferred with WLB, the strikers protested against the board's delay in enforcing the directive and carrying through its threat to take the matter to the President. Meanwhile, WLB has refused to take any action until the strikers return to their jobs.

Asked by a Post reporter what means of transportation the men used to come to Washington, a union official in Baltimore readily replied, "Why, they used private cars."

He was reminded that such driving was not in line with current OPA regulations, but persisted. "They weren't doing any 'pleasure driving.' These men were on union business."

Temporary Reduction in Greyhound Service During the Gasoline Shortage

on Washington — Leesburg — Winchester — Clarksburg and on Washington — Annapolis Routes

No "Extra Sections" Will Be Run

To comply with gasoline conservation orders of the Office of Defense Transportation, Capitol Greyhound service between Washington and Annapolis and between Washington, Purcellville, Leesburg, Berryville, Winchester and Clarksburg has been somewhat curtailed. Buses will continue to run on the same schedules as before, but only one bus will be operated on each scheduled trip—all "extra sections" have been eliminated.

This reduction in service is certain to mean some inconvenience and delay. You can help greatly to relieve crowding by avoiding all except necessary trips, leaving the limited space available for military personnel, war workers and other absolutely essential travelers. You may be sure that complete service will be resumed as quickly as conditions permit.

Coal Miners To Return to Work Monday

Lewis' recommendations and directed that telegrams of notification be sent out today.

The occasion marked Ickes' fourth appeal to Lewis. On the first occasion, Lewis and Ickes arranged a 15-day truce permitting the miners to return to work after the May 1 general strike which resulted in Government seizure of the mines. The second appeal produced a 13-day extension of the truce. The truce was allowed to expire at midnight, May 31, in spite of a third appeal.

Meets Operators Today

Each previous appeal drew protests from the War Labor Board, which objected that Ickes was negotiating with Lewis while Lewis was pointing a strike gun at the Government. It was reported that yesterday's letter was sent to Lewis with the approval of the White House.

Lewis is scheduled to meet again with the soft-coal operators at 10 a. m. today.

Whether negotiations would be resumed immediately was subject to speculation in view of the flat War Labor Board order Wednesday suspending negotiations until the men return to work. However, it was understood that Lewis and the Northern operators were very close to an agreement on the "portal-to-portal" pay issue at the time negotiations were broken off. Lewis had offered to accept a $1.50 a day "temporary" payment while the matter is being settled by a commission of experts. It is understood that the Northern operators are willing to pay at least $1 a day, although the best offer of the Southern operators has been 80 cents a day.

As evidence of the confidence of the Government that coal production would return to normal Monday, Ickes lifted the freeze on rail movement of coal which he instituted when the strike began Tuesday morning.

Adjustments in Effect

Ickes also announced that the mines will be operated under "normal working conditions" with adjustments ordered by the War Labor Board placed into immediate effect. These include an increase in vacation pay from $20 to $50, and payment for all occupational charges, including tools and equipment, safety equipment and devices, electric light and cap rentals, working tools and blacksmithing—about 25 cents a day in concessions in all. They were ordered placed into effect at 12:01 a. m. Monday in accordance with the President's back-to-work directive.

Ickes gave "a guarantee that the mines will be operated so as to safeguard the rights of the workers," including the right to continue union membership and engage in collective bargaining provided they did not interfere with the operation of the mines.

Lewis told his policy committee that negotiations "were proceeding favorably toward a prompt solution on Wednesday," with Ickes' "guidance," when the War Labor Board "maliciously commanded that these negotiations cease forthwith."

Giving in to Ickes

He made it clear that he was giving in to Ickes—making only one reference to the President, that "we have the assurance of the President that as soon as the mine workers return, the disposition of the dispute will forthwith proceed."

"We interpret this," Lewis said, "to mean that collective bargaining will proceed forthwith, with the operators acting in good faith to achieve a solution forthwith. We shall demand and expect that justice and equity will be granted to the miners by the lawfully constituted agencies of our Government, in due course."

Lewis used the following phrases to describe the War Labor Board and its attitudes: "This jealous and vindictive body," "this piously arrogant attitude," "unlawful directives," "a few men, seduced by their own egotism."

By contrast, Lewis stated that Ickes "is a duly constituted agent of the Government and we desire to cooperate with him."

WLB Labor Member Robert J. Watt commented, "To use one of John's favorite Shakespearian phrases, 'Me thinks the lady doth protest too much.'"

"The operators," Lewis said, "by their collusion with the War Labor Board, and by other unworthy and obstructive tactics, have forfeited their prerogatives of remaining masters in their own house."

Lewis acted while Government officials planned actions in the event of the miners' failure to heed the President's order. President Roosevelt disclosed that workers holding occupational deferments stood to lose them by remaining idle.

Ickes concluded his order reopening the mines with the comment:

"The obligation of every worker to his country in time of war is supreme. I call upon each miner to place above everything his loyalty to his country in time of war."

Strikes Show Lack Of Unity, Religion Key, Says Chaplain

The Rev. David F. O'Connor, Catholic chaplain for District prisons, yesterday deplored the lack of national unity which, he said, is demonstrated by the coal strikes.

Father O'Connor, who has walked the "last mile" with many notorious criminals, addressed a First Friday luncheon at the Willard Hotel, sponsored by the Washington section, League of Laymen's Retreats.

Declaring that strikes show a need of both "spiritual and temporal unity," Father O'Connor observed that "religion should be encouraged by those in government."

Harry P. Somerville, former Willard manager and layman at St. Thomas the Apostle's Church, presided in the absence through illness of Dr. M. D'Arcy Magee, president of the Washington section.

WFA to Shift To More Beans, Less Meats

A program designed to decrease or level off the production of all feed-derived products except fluid milk and cheese is being worked out by the War Food Administration.

At the same time decreases in livestock, pigs and poultry are being effected, accompanying sharp increases will be made in the production of wheat, corn, edible soybeans, peanuts, dry beans, peas, Irish potatoes and sweet potatoes.

Diet Realignment

Thus the American diet will be realigned to accent grains, milk, vegetables and eggs. If the war should continue for two or three more years, meat in almost any form would become a distinct luxury.

Effects of the program will be felt next year and increase in intensity as the record herds and flocks are eaten up.

The shift is being made, WFA officials said, because livestock feed supplies are insufficient to support such a large animal population—and war calls for food that can be produced and be ready for direct human consumption when harvested.

Substitutions Explained

By shifting from hogs to wheat, it was pointed out, the consumer will be trading 1 pound of pork for the 7 pounds of grain it took to make it.

WFA nutrition experts say that vegetable proteins can be substituted for as much as one-half of the proteins formerly obtained from meat. While hogs return more total calories per unit of feed used than any other type of livestock, protein is a more critical item in the diet than calories. The dairy cow leads other animals in the production of protein.

Eggs will be leveled off at their present high production levels, according to the plans, but the number of chickens for meat will be decreased. "All of this does not mean we will have less to eat," a WFA official said. "It assures us an adequate quick supply."

More Potatoes Arrive; State Ceilings Stick

Maximum prices for potatoes sold in Washington at retail were announced yesterday by the local OPA as follows:

Class 1 stores, 1-pound, 6 cents; 2 pounds, 12 cents; 3 pounds, 17 cents; 4 pounds, 22 cents; 5 pounds, 27 cents.

Prices in other stores are slightly lower, although they were not announced in full.

Potatoes from the Hastings area in Florida may be sold at not more than 7 cents a pound, due to higher ceilings in this area. Dealers, however, must demonstrate to their customers that potatoes sold at the higher figure are from the Hastings area.

Concurrently with the arrival of four carloads of potatoes from Florida and South Carolina, the OPA announced the continuation of the present ceiling prices on the commodity in the two States as well as in Texas.

Considerable easing of the potato shortage in the city is foreseen for the next few days. Two chain stores are offering them at 5 cents a pound in 5-pound lots.

Dealers also said they were expecting shipments, by the first of the week, that would all find their way into legitimate channels.

The OPA order, fixing ceiling prices on the South Carolina and Florida crops means that wholesale ceilings in Washington will remain at $4.81 and $4.17 a hundred pounds respectively.

A ceiling of $3.40 a hundred was ordered maintained on all of the Florida potatoes east and south of the Suwannee River, with a price of $2.80 for spuds grown west of that river.

In South Carolina the ceiling price of $2.80 was ordered maintained, whereas a drop of 10 cents a hundred had previously been ordered effective June 1.

All of the prices will now remain in effect during the remainder of the season, the OPA said.

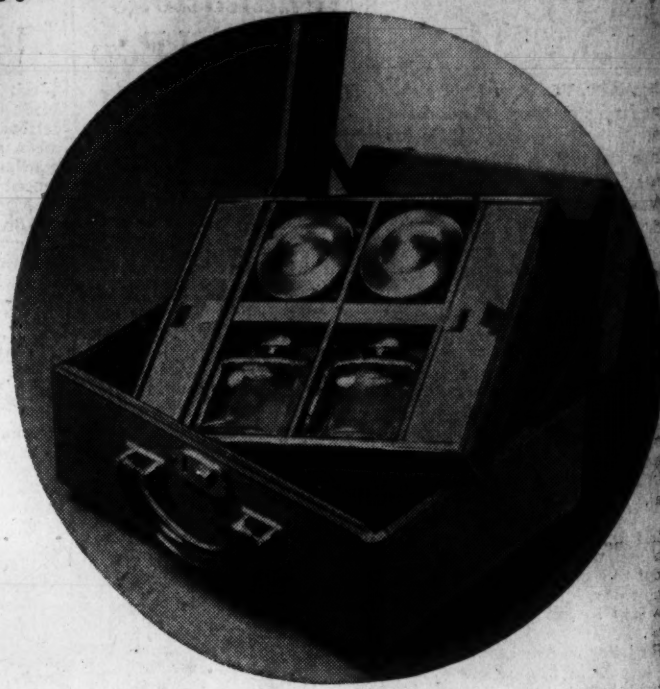

The prices were maintained as the result of weather conditions and labor shortages which have combined to delay digging the crops, according to the OPA.

Two truck loads of potatoes, the sale of which was halted Thursday by the local OPA when it was discovered they were being offered at above ceiling price, moved out of the city sometime late Thursday, their destination unknown.

Clatterbuck Waits Jury On June 14

Leesburg, Va., June 4.—The case of the murder of A. Morris Love, Mrs. Ruth Grubb Love, their son James and their hired man, Walter Russell and his wife Catherine, confessed by T. W. Clatterbuck last night, is closed until it comes before the grand jury June 14, Commonwealth's Attorney Charles A. Harrison said today.

Clatterbuck, now in the Frederick County Jail at Winchester, probably will remain there until he is brought to Leesburg for indictment when the next term of Circuit Court begins a week from Monday, Harrison said.

As a consequence, Tom Clatterbuck, the man who admitted killing Love because he feared exposure of his forging a name on a $2000 note and who is said to have confessed to slaying the others on the farm to seal their lips, probably will stay in jail until the indictment.

His jailer reported yesterday: "He's gettin' kind o' jittery. Sort of lettin' down. But most of the time he's right calm."

"He just sets mostly." And as he sits, Clatterbuck must be brooding, picturing the way of life he might have led, for Bill Clatterbuck had almost everything it took to make a good life. He had a neat, white-painted, frame home up in the little mountain town of Hillsboro. He had a nice looking dark-haired wife and four children. Another was on the way. He made good money, averaging $100 a week, hauling crushed stone from his small quarry to county, State and Federal road projects where he held contracts.

Had Had People's Respect

What's more, Clatterbuck had the respect of most people in Loudoun County right up to the mass bludgeoning and shooting on the Love farm and until the day after when word began to get around that he hadn't "done right" by Morris Love in a financial deal and might have been the murderer. Folks agreed he was something of a "wild un," but everybody figured he'd outgrow it and settle down sometime. Some boys just aren't full grown at 33, they reasoned.

The minister at the church Clatterbuck attended asserted he was a religious man, a regular churchgoer, and, as far as he knew, a man who lived righteously and did well by his family. Other Loudoun residents did not share his view, however.

Clatterbuck's confession last night was termed by Commonwealth's Attorney Charles Harrison "the longest I ever heard." It was simple and direct, for after Clatterbuck broke down he told the facts of what happened that sunny Tuesday morning without elaboration and seemed to withhold nothing.

Fatal Phone Call
Today it was disclosed that Walter Russell and his wife, Catherine, may have lost their lives merely because of a phone call from Clatterbuck to Love, in which the quarryman told the farmer he would be by to see him that morning.

After his sudden rage and bludgeoning of Love, the subsequent meeting with James Love, his death and the shooting of Mrs. Love, Clatterbuck was said to have feared Russell and his wife might have known he was there because of the phone call. So he killed them both.

Clatterbuck's confession as released by the Commonwealth's attorney, however, disclosed that he had feared one of the Russells might have seen his struggle with James Love on the porch.

Still another disclosure today was the fact that Russell once had worked for Clatterbuck and for that reason had felt no fear when the man walked down the field toward him with the rifle in his hand.

(Clatterbuck's confession of the murders had specifically stated that Russell "wasn't scared" when he advanced toward him.)

Meanwhile, the Commonwealth's attorney was asked whether there had been a report from the FBI on the weapons and other evidence the bureau had been examining. He said there would be no public statement on the results of the tests until the grand jury convenes.

As for the hair found in the hand of James Love, for which such high hopes had been held before the confession of Clatterbuck practically closed the investigation, Deputy District Coroner Richard Rosenberg, who made the tests, said it belonged to James, himself.

That Man's Here Nominations For Ideal Pop Flood Post

Wanted: Washington's ideal dad. Maybe he's a Government employee, daily battling the Capital's transportation problems to get to the Pentagon or some other Government building.

Maybe he's in uniform and so far away that Sally and Junior know him better from his letters than from actual memory.

Probably, like most of Washington, he is up to his ears in helping to win the war but still finds time to play with exuberant youngsters in the evening, to listen to their private joys and woes, to sympathize over cuts and bruises, to lend a bit of advice on a tough arithmetic problem or walk miles through Rock Creek Park on his only free day for some impromptu nature study.

Closes June 15.

Whatever he does, The Post wants to know about him. As part of its annual quest for the ideal father of the area, this newspaper is sponsoring a contest to close June 15, in which entrants must write in to tell all about the Man Who Runs Things—more or less.

Father's Day will be June 20, you know, and The Post's contest during the past three years has become a Capital tradition as part of its celebration. The top pop and his family are in for some pleasant surprises, too—but further announcement of that will be made later.

File of Letters

In the impressive pile of letters already received, mothers seem to do most of the writing—possibly after the head of the house has moved himself into extra good favor by weeding the victory garden, hanging curtains or repairing the leaking kitchen pipe. Two young daughters have added their bit, too, but thus far the boys of the family have failed to contribute a single line in dad's behalf.

The Post has no doubt as to the identity of the perfect father—he's yours and yours and he's the man up the street. But we can't receive proof by any means except your letters—so don't forget that the deadline is June 15 and that the sooner they arrive, the better, for excerpts from early arrivals will be used anonymously to show just what kind of dads live in and near Washington.

Address the letters, any length, written in any style—to Father's Day Editor, The Washington Post.

The White House Photographers Association yesterday announced that its first annual photo contest and exhibit will be held in the promenade of the Mayflower Hotel from June 24 through June 29.

Staff photos of the four Washington newspapers and the major picture syndicates will be displayed. Pictures on the human side of the news, sports action, historic events and pictures of the President will be the classes represented. They must have been made between December 7, 1941, and March 30, 1943.

Judges will be Alexander F. Jones, Washington Post; Ben McKelway, Evening Star; George DeWitt, Times-Herald; John O'Rourke, Daily News; and Franklin Fisher, National Geographic Magazine.

Vice President Henry A. Wallace will present the trophies and plaques on the opening day. There will be a cup presented for the outstanding picture, plaques for the others.

A special section of photos from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard also will be exhibited. Entries from members of the White House Photographers Association now in the armed services will be submitted anonymously, in accordance with Army and Navy regulations.

The White House Photographers Association was founded June 13, 1921, at the request of the Lawrence W. Richey, secretary to President Harding for newsreel photographers permanently assigned in Washington to cover the White House. The association recently broadened the scope of its membership to include photo editors, newsreel sound men and contact men in addition to the lens men covering the events for local papers, wire services, picture magazines and newsreels.

There are 90 members of the association. President is George Dorsey of Pathe News; vice president, Arthur E. Scott, INP; secretary-treasurer, George R. Scadding, AP. Members of the exhibit committee are Max Desfors, AP, chairman; Arthur Scott, INP, George Dorsey, Pathe News, Andrew May, Harris & Ewing and George R. Scadding, AP.

Dope Peddler Sentenced to 1 to 3 Years

Jack Hensley, 28, of the 2300 block of First Street Northwest, described by the Treasury Department as being a kingpin in the marihuana racket here, was sentenced yesterday by Justice James W. Morris in District Court to from 1 to 3 years for illegal possession of 125 grains of the narcotic. Assistant United States Attorney Bernard Margolius prosecuted the case.

At the same time narcotic agents here disclosed details of their year-long investigation of the racket. They have traced the source of supply to Mexico, it was said.

The youth of many of the addicts to marihuana was mentioned yesterday by narcotic officials as adding particular importance to the need of stamping out the racket in Washington. It is claimed that addicts have been found in some of Washington's high schools and universities.

Officials said that although Hensley was not linked definitely with the sale of the drug to juveniles he was known to be an important figure in the loosely knit distribution system here.

During their investigations, narcotic officials said, two elaborate clubrooms were discovered operating as "reefer" smoking dens—the name commonly given to the drug by addicts—with music furnished to add to the atmosphere of the establishments. Agents said the most elaborate of these had a built-in bar, comfortable chairs, soft lights and de luxe musical instruments. The location of the clubrooms was not disclosed.

Agents said yesterday that an anonymous telephone call had "put the finger" on a New York wholesaler of the weed and that his arrest produced clues that led to the arrest here of Hensley and another man, Rollin Webber, who is awaiting trial in District Court.

Commissioners Agree to OCD Fund Request

By Roger Young
Post Staff Writer

The District Commissioners changed their minds again yesterday—apparently a Commissioner's privilege—and decided Civilian War Services should have District funds after all.

Although the capitulation was perhaps not so extreme as the retreats from their positions on the rooming house fire escape regulations and use of public parking for victory gardens, yesterday's decision was the third in six weeks in which public pressure had caused the Commissioners to abandon adamantly stated rulings.

Allotment of $25,000
Under the "compromise" agreement reached, $25,000 will be given to carry out the work of the Civilian War Services which the Commissioners had previously declared to be duplication of work already being done by Federal or District agencies or organized charities. This included war hospital, consumer aid, long-range feeding and housing projects.

While the setup will not be under the regular Department of Civilian Defense, it will be recognized as an official District agency, operating under the Commissioners through a volunteer service board. The executive committee of the Civilian War Services had asked for $70,000 and a status as a division of the Civilian Defense Department.

Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech has been instructed to prepare legislation that will enable the Commissioners to allocate the $25,000 from the one-million-dollar blackout fund.

Dr. J. C. Hudson, Radium Specialist, Dies Unexpectedly

Arlington, Mass., June 4 (AP).—Dr. J. Cramer Hudson, 46, Harvard University physicist who had dealt particularly in the field of radium, died unexpectedly last night at his home here. He was an Army Medical Corps veteran of the first World War.

A native of Pleasanton, Kans., he attended Park College at Parkville, Mo., Pennsylvania State College and Harvard, where he was awarded the doctor of philosophy degree.

He was a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and a member of the American Physical Society and of the Fifth International Congress of Radiology. His widow, Cecilia Dorotea, survives.

F. H. Rhodes Dies; Former Builder, Was Retired Here
F. H. Rhodes, former resident of Beaufort, S. C., died yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Faye R. Anderson, 3620 Sixteenth Street Northwest.

A Royal Arch Mason, Mr. Rhodes had made his home in Washington since retiring from the lumber and building business in Beaufort two years ago. He was born in Wellsville, N. Y., in 1860, where he received his education.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Mary E. Rhodes; two daughters, Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. J. C. Crosby of New York City, and three grandchildren. Funeral services will be conducted at the S. H. Hines Co. funeral home at 11 a. m. Monday. Burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Witness Says Dempsey Used Fists on Rival

By the Associated Press
White Plains, N. Y., June 4.—Fists that won the world's heavy-weight boxing championship were tossed twice by Jack Dempsey at Benny Woodall—named by Dempsey as a correspondent in divorce proceedings—when the boxer caught Woodall running from his wife's bedroom, a private detective testified today.

The testimony about the blows was given by Lawrence Simeon Hutchens of Los Angeles, one in the raiding party that called at Mrs. Dempsey's Los Angeles apartment in November, 1942, and it climaxed the presentation of Dempsey's case against Mrs. Hannah Williams Dempsey, musical comedy songstress.

Afterward Arthur F. Driscoll, Dempsey's attorney, announced completion of testimony and Gerald Donovan, lawyer for Mrs. Dempsey, won a postponement of the hearing before a Supreme Court referee until 10 a. m. Monday when Mrs. Dempsey's side is scheduled to be presented as a defense of her husband's suit and her own counter-suit.

No Hint of Her Content

No hint has been given as to what Mrs. Dempsey will contend. Adultery is the only ground for divorce in New York State.

Detective Hutchens told the Court that Woodall sat on the edge of a bed in Mrs. Dempsey's bedroom and remained silent as Dempsey, now a lieutenant commander in the Coast Guard, told his wife: "This is a nice way to treat me. I'm out trying to defend my country and you're running around with a rat like this."

Hutchens testified he saw Dempsey in front of the sofa in the living room of Mrs. Dempsey's apartment and Woodall was "on the floor." Hutchens added:

"I saw Dempsey had Mr. Woodall down. He had hit him a couple of licks. I pulled Mr. Dempsey away."

Mrs. Dempsey has not been in the courtroom since the first day of the hearing, Tuesday, May 25. Her lawyer and physician claimed she was suffering from a nervous condition.

Quotes Dempsey

Earlier, Miss Hazel McNeel, an associate private detective of Ned H. Peterson, Los Angeles investigator, quoted Dempsey as saying to Mrs. Dempsey: "I have caught you again."

The witness continued: "Then Peterson and Benny Woodall came into the room."

Asked to describe what Woodall wore, Miss McNeel testified:

"He had on a dark pair of, I would say, pajama trousers and an undershirt. No shoes or socks. I picked up a pair of men's shoes next to the bed occupied by Mrs. Dempsey."

"Mrs. Dempsey remained in bed the whole time and did not change her position."

Miss McNeel said Mrs. Dempsey wore light blue pajamas, which she had observed her wearing earlier in the evening when the raiding party was watching the apartment through half-opened windows.

State to Get Most of Large Snuff Fortune

By the Associated Press
Harrisburg, Pa., June 4.—Dreams of a Maharajah's wealth vanished today for the 26,000 "cousins" and would-be heirs of eccentric Mrs. Henrietta Schaeffer Garrett, the Philadelphia "snuff fortune" widow whose strange will precipitated the most complex estate litigation in American legal annals.

Gov. Edward Martin signed into law two bills which annex for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania—also a claimant to the estate—an 80 per cent slice of the great fortune Mrs. Garrett neglected to dispose of in her last testament.

Childless and so retiring that in the 35 years before her death she left her brownstone house only once, Mrs. Garrett died in comparative obscurity in 1930, leaving a will which gave a few friends and servants $62,250 of her $17,500,000 fortune—which since has grown to 20 million dollars.

Cousins sprang up all over the world. Claims to the estate were filed from every State in the Union except Vermont and New Hampshire, and from virtually every sizeable country on the globe. Even Adolf Hitler once was reported backing the claim of a "relative."

By January, 1943 a total of 26,000 claims were on file, and records of the litigation were spicched with murder, scandal, and fraud. A man in Germany slew his uncle and aunt in a quarrel over the wealth.

Members of a Pennsylvania family forged Bible and birth certificates to support a claim and some have gone to jail. Witnesses have disappeared mysteriously as exposure of fake claims appeared certain.

Governor Martin took the wind out of all claimants' sails today by approving legislation authorizing an 80 per cent property tax on estates unsettled after seven years, including in the bill a retroactive clause applying specifically to the Garrett case.

D. C. Court Record

The 9000 cases filed in the clerk's office of the United States District Court here last year established a record for all United States courts in the Nation, it was announced yesterday by Charles E. Stewart, clerk of courts. The Southern District of New York had the next largest number of cases which was 1300 less than the total filed here.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

The most significant fact regarding the aftermath of the Roosevelt-Churchill conferences is that the Nazis are continuing to take troops out of Western Europe and pile them into Russia. This means one of two things:

1. The Nazis are not worried over the prospect of an Allied invasion of Europe.

2. Hitler is determined to make one last gamble, throwing all he has into Russia, in a win or lose attempt to take the Soviet out of the war.

Diplomatic information coming from neutral countries is unmistakable that German troops have been withdrawn from (a) Norway, even though there is talk of a British landing operation there; from (b) France, de-pite newspaper gossip about a cross-Channel invasion; also from (c) southern Italy, despite daily Allied bombings of that area.

Apparently the Nazis figure on letting the Italians defend their own homeland, and reckon that the islands of Sicily and Sardinia are as good as gone anyway. At any rate German military activity inside Italy is confined to the industrial North, where strong fortifications are being erected.

All this would indicate that Hitler figures Italy is more or less of a weight around his neck and that he would be glad to drop it just as long as he can keep the Allies from penetrating beyond Italy. And with the Alps to help him, this should be possible—at least until after he finishes his great and last gamble in Russia.

No Land Invasion in '43

The opinion of this columnist, purely personal, is that both of the above deductions are true, and that there will be no real land invasion of Europe this year (the islands of Sicily and Sardinia being excepted), and that Hitler, apparently confident of this, will do his utmost to take Russia out of the war this summer.

These deductions are relatively simple and can be drawn by any good military observer. Since the German general staff has some of the best military strategists in the world, Hitler's present movements may be based on similar deductions. At any rate, here they are:

1. No successful invasion of Western Europe can take place without a terrific, relentless pounding of Axis industry and Axis fortifications from the air. This has only just begun. As of March, the United States had only about 200 Flying Fortresses in England, and the raids over the continent were mere flea bites, compared with what is necessary and what is now taking place. A good many weeks of this pounding will have to continue before an invasion of Western Europe—where Stalin wants it most—could take place successfully.

2. Churchill has always turned thumbs down on sacrificing any large body of British troops in invading Western Europe. This is not new. It was his policy when Molotov and Stalin urged and begged him for a second front at last summer. It was also reported to be his position at Casablanca, where a second front was definitely promised. In other words, when an invasion was to be started it must include a predominant percentage of American troops.

This has been historic British policy—namely, that she fights on the sea and teams up with an ally which does the fighting on land. So it is not unreasonable to assume that Churchill stuck to this during his current talks with Roosevelt.

U-Boats Block U. S.

3. The submarine menace has been such that it is impossible to send a large body of United States troops to England. And invasion of Western Europe would require half a million Americans, assuming that Churchill would go in on a 50-50 basis, and despite the buoyant submarine statements of Frank Knox, so large a shipment could not be accomplished in a short time.

4. A second front through Spain is vigorously opposed by the Vatican, Archbishop Spellman and church leaders.

5. An invasion of Italy would not be difficult, but after accomplishing it there are still the Alps—plus 40 million hungry Italians to feed.

6. Finally, there is the question of invasion through Turkey and the Balkans. It is quite conceivable that Churchill argued at some length for this. After all, it has been his thesis ever since the fateful Gallipoli campaign in 1915 that the easiest way to hit Germany was through Turkey and the Balkans.

However, there has been a century-old jealousy between Britain and Russia over the Dardanelles. At least one bitter war has been fought between them over this vital water outlet to land-locked Russia. And Stalin, the one Allied leader we are trying most to help with a second front, has been dead opposed to British operations around this vital gateway.

Finally, the Balkan invasion route is slow, roundabout and also hedged in by mountains. It could not be started until the Axis islands in the Mediterranean were all cleaned out, probably not before September.

And what Stalin wants is a second front now. By September the Red Army may have lost another million men and Moscow may have been taken.

Angry Russia

If the above deductions are anywhere near correct, it is obvious that we will face an extremely difficult political problem with Russia. Stalin has argued for more than a year that his army had been left to bear the brunt of the attack alone. He has maintained that the first object of any military campaign was to engage the enemy, not conquer territory.

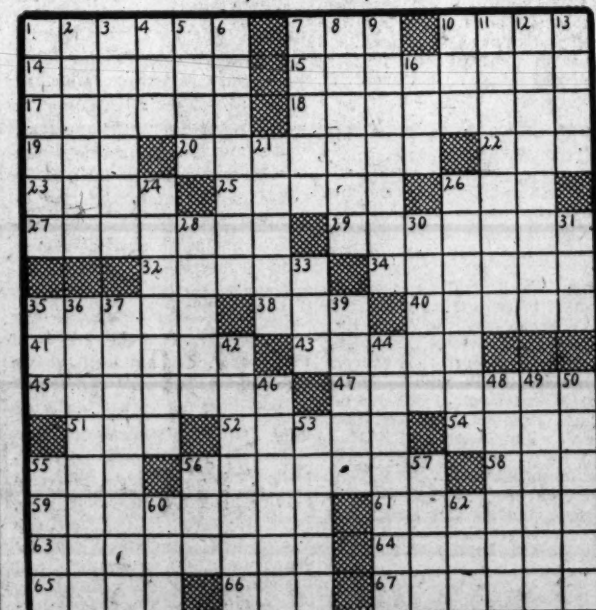

He also maintains that an Allied invasion across the Channel is the quickest, most efficient way to engage the enemy in large numbers. It would save Russia this summer. There would be losses, heavy losses. But also, the Russians point out, they have taken losses—heavier losses than any other nation.

As to whether the Red Army can weather the terrific onslaught Hitler will hurl against it this summer is a question to be discussed in another column. But if Russia does come through the next three months' ordeal, we will have an angry, sullen ally, nursing the belief that she has been deserted and in no mood to cooperate with us in the Far East, where Siberian bases are almost essential if we are to knock out Japan.

Therefore the effect on the Far East may be the most important repercussions from the recent Churchill-Roosevelt conversations.

Postwar Studies

Probably the most hopeful thing about our outlook toward the postwar era is the general disposition to study it. Almost everyone realizes that we are piling up economic and social problems of a greater magnitude than the country has ever before faced. For a time at least we shall have to help feed a hungry world and reconstruct devastated countries. We shall have to demobilize by far the largest Army the United States has ever had, and find jobs for the men. Industry will have to be reconverted to peacetime production and staggering debts will have to be paid. The magnitude of the adjustments that must be made is a challenge to every statesman, official and office seeker as well as to every citizen who thinks about the future of his country.

So it is an encouraging sign of the times that Americans are forming hundreds of groups to study situations that we shall have to face in the postwar world. The latest of these groups is the Republican Postwar Advisory Council announced by Chairman Spangler of the Republican National Committee today. It is composed of G. O. P. Senators, Representatives, Governors and party officials. Apparently its chief function will be to gather data on all phases of the country's economic and social evolution with the object of working out a program that can be submitted to the Republican national convention in 1944.

Aside from the war, this is the last problem in the world that should be approached from a partisan viewpoint. When the work of reconstruction begins, it should be guided by a truly national policy and not by any program evolved in a partisan atmosphere. But the best assurance that forward-looking plans will be devised as they are needed is to have many interested groups probing into the background of facts and situations out of which legislation may be expected to grow. The G. O. P. Council and all similar groups are likely to succeed to the extent that they subordinate party issues to the national interest in this great undertaking.

Hail, Argentina

The coup d'état staged in Argentina, by democratic and pro-Ally elements in the Argentine army appears to have been completely successful. President Castillo, against whom the revolt was directed, is now in exile, having signally failed to win any real measure of support against the rebel leaders. His foreign minister, Dr. Ruiz Guinazu, has taken refuge in the Chilean Embassy. The rebel leaders are firmly ensconced in Government House in Buenos Aires.

Full information is still lacking as to just what happened. But the evidence available suggests that the revolt arose out of growing popular discontent with the domestic and international policies of the Castillo regime. This discontent found an echo and came to a head in the Argentine army. The dissidents objected to Castillo's stiff-necked determination to continue diplomatic relations with the Axis in spite of the obligations assumed by the Argentine government at the Rio Conference. This attitude isolated Argentina from a community of American nations all of whom have either declared war or at least have broken relations with the Axis.

Recent events have made it very clear that Castillo and Ruiz Guinazu had guessed wrong. Assuming that the Axis would triumph, they were loath to offend the winners. By the time this belief had proved grievously mistaken, the Castillo regime was too far committed to change its course. In the meantime it took strong measures to suppress public expressions of faith in the Allies and also laid plans for the continuance of Castillo's policies under a successor to be chosen in this year's election.

The successor was to be Patron Costas. And the formal ratification of President Castillo's choice by the Conservative Party to which the overthrown chief executive of Argentina belongs was to have taken place this week. It was to head off this event that the army moved. It is not strange that its coup found considerable support among the Argentine population. From the first the Argentines have been overwhelmingly pro-democratic, pro-Ally and anti-Axis. It now looks as if the leaders of the revolt intend to realize the people's aspirations. In announcing their program they emphasize three aims: (1) The holding of a free election; (2) the carrying out by Argentina of her international obligations; (3) solidarity with the other American republics.

Very clearly a reversal of Argentina's position would seem to be in the offing. We seem to be on the verge of seeing the entire continent united in one policy. That can only be welcome news in the Americas. By the same token it is bad news for the Axis.

Cox Case

More than three weeks have passed since Clifford J. Durr of the Federal Communications Commission petitioned Speaker Rayburn to disqualify Representative E. E. Cox as a member of the House committee investigating the FCC. The Speaker referred the petition to the House Judiciary Committee. Since that committee has done nothing more than discuss the petition, Mr. Durr raised the same question yesterday, in a letter to Judiciary Chairman Sumners of Texas, for Mr. Cox is again preparing to press his inquisition, even though he is a stockholder in a broadcasting company seeking a renewal of license from the FCC.

It is said that members of the Judiciary Committee question their jurisdiction to pass upon other committee appointments made by the Speaker. That seems to be a strained view because of the fact that the Speaker referred the petition to the committee. The reasonable assumption is that he expected the committee to conduct hearings into the Cox affair and to recommend a course of action to the Speaker and the House. It is not unusual to ask the Judiciary Committee to pass upon issues involving the qualifications of House members. On the contrary, this committee is better qualified than any other to investigate questions of this sort impartially and recommend action in keeping with the dignity and prestige of the House.

We can understand that the Judiciary Committee is reluctant to handle this hot potato. But it is not a simple question of whether a certain member of the House should serve on a select committee. The real question is whether the House will permit its powers to be used by a member having a financial interest in a broadcasting company to smear the agency created by law to regulate broadcasting. The House cannot sanction such a biased investigation without bringing contempt upon its own head and thus in some measure weakening the cause of democracy.

Congress and the courts have rightly cracked down on administrative agencies when they have denied individuals a fair hearing. Fair hearings are one of the corner stones of democratic procedure. Is it possible that the House itself will deny application of this basic principle in a case involving one of its own members? In a letter to the Judiciary Committee Commissioner Durr asks for a public hearing on his charge that Congressman Cox is not a proper person to conduct the FCC inquiry. Denial of that appeal would be a disgrace to the House and to the Nation for which it speaks. We do not believe that either the Judiciary Committee or the Speaker will accept the weight of such a stigma upon its shoulders.

Thinking Through

The trouble with so many of the speeches in behalf of international cooperation after the war is that they are composed of glittering generalities. But the foundation of the new world will not be built with that kind of material. There must be something concrete to work on. Evidently with this thought in mind, Senator Austin last night offered his own suggestion of the practical steps that should be taken in building the world of tomorrow. It was a particularly welcome testimony. Of late there has been a tendency, which gathered some plausibility from Senator Austin's adherence to the Danaher amendment to the Trade Agreements Act, to think that the Vermontor was backsliding. In other words, the whisper had been going the rounds that the Senator had gone over to the isolationist camp. There will be no support for this rumor in Senator Austin's forthright ideas on the necessity of collaboration with likeminded nations.

The Senator's contribution was one of several in a radio forum on "For This We Fight." What we are fighting for, says Senator Austin, is for a more perfect union, though not uniformity, of the United Nations. Specifically there must be "international organization for strategic security comprising council, court, and military power." But the Senator would not wait for the planners to set up an all-in world organization. He wants to see China, Russia, Great Britain and the United States "lead off." The court would be a necessary adjunct to an international regime based upon law as well as order. So would the exercise of force. As to this, "military power adequate to overwhelm any violator of the code ought to be available to the council." Senator Austin envisages the employment of separate forces, presumably at the instigation of the Council of Nations, rather than the use of world police, as the Ball resolution recommends.

The Senator's address will raise questions concerning the details of application. Would he favor a treaty of alliance to bind the four powers who would "lead off" the new Council of Nations? Should the four powers constitute the council? A council to embrace the entire world might be too unwieldy to be workable. It should more logically be restricted to the nations who would have to employ the sanctions against an aggressor. In such a setup, of course, the small nations might feel under pressure from a new concert of powers which might act tyrannously. But the grounds for such a fear would be removed by universal acceptance of a world code based upon the Atlantic Charter and backed by a world court for the adjudication of disputes. There may be more merit in the use of force by individual members of the council acting on a world mandate than in the use of a world police force. The problem, however, would be academic if the big powers remained united. Such a unity would in itself be sufficient to keep the peace.

The problem is to discover a unity of interest among the big powers in peace as in war. Russia feels that she must be put in a condition enabling her to be a partner in world organization. Evidently the 20-year alliance with Britain is not sufficient for that purpose. Accordingly the suggestion is made by the London Observer that Britain should share British naval bases with Soviet Russia as with the United States. This may persuade the Russians that in relying on world organization for their security, they will be relying on a real partnership. But their faith would be buttressed even more by American action on world organization. This is the main purpose that Senator Austin has in view. We cannot afford to be without "a settled foreign policy when we commence negotiations with our partners."

Leslie Howard

Of all those British-born actors who invaded Broadway and Hollywood in the period between the two World Wars, Leslie Howard had the largest and most consistent appeal to American audiences. Thus no other casualty of the present war, perhaps, has occasioned so much general regret in the United States as his death.

Leslie Howard was not a great actor, if one is to measure greatness by the actor's capacity to subordinate his personality to the character in which he is cast. If Howard was a failure as Hamlet and a disappointment as Romeo (in the movie version), he would have been an even greater failure as Lear or Macbeth. Heroic tragedy, in the sense of the character who himself sets in motion the forces of his own destruction, was apparently beyond his powers. The sort of character that Howard did best is the more modern character who is destroyed by outside influences rather than by forces within himself—that is to say, the innocent, sensitive, maladjusted man unable to protect himself against the aggressions of a hostile society inferior to himself.

Fortunately, it was in such roles (most notably perhaps as the protagonist in John Galsworthy's symbolic parable, "Escape") that Leslie Howard was introduced to American audiences. A certain poetic gentleness, guilelessness and ineffectual nobility heightened the contrast between the actor and his stage environments and between him and the malignant destinies which pursued him. It was natural that such an actor should have such a strong appeal to a romantic generation which, not altogether without reason, liked to consider itself as "lost." In other words, Howard was at his best as a sort of innocent "lost soul," as, for example, in his part in "Mr. Robert Sherwood's 'The Petrified Forest'."

In private life, of course, he was something else—an affectionate friend, a happy husband and father, and an unselfish and not too vocable patriot. If he perished, as he probably did, with the others on the Lisbon-London plane, then he died in the service of his nation, and such a death is not to be called frustration.

Hospital Corps

As men devise new means of maiming one another, it is heartening to know that they have also made strides in the art of healing. A report recently released by the Office of War Information discloses that of the United States naval and marine personnel wounded in action since Pearl Harbor, only 2.6 per cent have died as a result of their wounds. The percentage of fatalities among Army injured is believed to be about the same. Chief reason for this record, never before approached, is that medical assistance is at hand to serve the wounded men almost instantly.

Medical care starts with the servicemen themselves, who are equipped with sulfa drugs to treat their own hurts, if possible, or those of their comrades. These new drugs and the blood plasma which has so generally been made available by civilians are important factors, of course, in the saving of human life on the battlefields. But the prime factor has been the work of the hospital corpsmen, themselves exposed to all the hazards of war, who advance directly with the troops and work among them in the thick of the fighting. They give immediate temporary treatment to the wounded who are then moved back by litter bearers to the battalion aid stations a short distance behind the lines. These hospital corpsmen may not win military victories, but they make them possible. Their heroism deserves our tribute no less than that of the fighting men themselves.

HOUND DOG

I mind how you used to stare into the fire,
In the place where the old cat lies,
Nose on paw, and the warm
Humor in your eyes.
There is no smell of wet dog by the fire
Or a soft ear under my hand. I mind
How you used to love a rain and a road,
Wild as a werewolf, bounding down the wind.
The old cat snored by the fire
Now you are done with it.
If beyond, there's no room on a hearth for you
I'll have none of it.

Inflation Threat

AMERICAN AND British military successes have relieved Latin America of its first war threat, the danger of military invasion, but a second one is now beginning to materialize. This is a threat that the United States has been having to deal with since 1940—danger of runaway inflation.

Latin America has to import by far the greater part of its manufactured goods and a great part of the semimanufactured materials their industries use. They also bring in large quantities of foodstuffs. The United States, the only major source to which they can now turn, is straining every nerve to send supplies to Britain and Russia and material to our own fighting men. We can spare only a minimum of ships for war uses. And the internal distribution of supplies within Latin America has been thrown out of joint by gasoline, truck, tire, coal and railway replacement parts shortages.

Control of Prices

At the same time our increased purchases of war materials from them is giving them more money than they have had for years. Employment is high in most places and there are even labor shortages. Short supplies and heavy demands automatically add up to steeply rising prices.

The situation would be bad enough if it only meant hardship for Latin Americans, whose cost of living is going up, and headaches for their governments as they try to do something about it. But there is more to it than that. Since the problem has begun to grow serious, Axis agents and sympathizers, always on the alert for a wedge to drive into the inter-American front, are trying to make political capital out of it. They are taking cues from Berlin and Tokyo. Radio Tokyo has in recent days harped on food shortages on the South American west coast and predicted more strikes in Bolivia because of "American-inspired price rises." The high costs of imported American goods is constantly played on. We are pictured as fattening on their needs.

The truth of the matter is that the United States has done more for any nation has ever done in recorded economic history to keep down the prices of goods we export to Latin America. Serious economic dislocations were foreseen by the leaders of the American republics as soon as war broke out in Europe, and the United States at the first meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs at Panama in 1939 pledged our full efforts to offset them. After Pearl Harbor involved the hemisphere directly in war, we agreed, among many other measures of economic defense, to take the steps necessary to prevent profiteering in export goods.

American Exporters

In April, 1942, the United States Office of Price Administration issued an order that made it impossible for American exporters to kitem prices to Latin American customers. These latter could, according to this order, only be charged legal American prices, plus a small mark-up to take care of export expenses, war risk insurance, etc. There has been no way that American exporters could get around this order, because every article of merchandise that is sent out of this country goes out on an export license, and all export licenses are checked to see that prices are legal before they are approved. This makes an airtight control on our export prices. I quote the last annual report of the Industrial Bank of Peru to show how this control has worked: "Reduction in average value of imports (from the United States) from 1233 soles per ton in 1941 to 1167 soles in 1942 shows the influence of price control measures established by the United States Government." The report of course referred to prices Peruvian importers paid to American exporters.

But the goods get to the importers in Latin America, we of course have absolutely no control over them. It has been at this point that they have started toward the sky. For one example, black baling wire sold to Argentine importers at 9 pesos a kilo finally reached the consumer at 140 pesos a kilo. This is an extreme but it is not unusual for prices to be increased 5 to 10 times above our export price.

This makes the problem one that Latin-American governments, and they alone, can handle. Cuba months ago pegged the prices of flour, lard and rice, three of her big imports, to our export prices and the control is reported to be working very well.

Other nations, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Mexico and Colombia, have recently begun steps toward stricter price controls. Holding the line on inflation is one of the big contributions to the fight against the Axis that they will be called on to make.

Pantelleria As Test

EVERY DAY for almost an entire month and sometimes several times a day, Allied planes have flown over Pantelleria and dropped their bombs. Recently the assault on the island from the air began to be supplemented by an attack from the sea. During the past few days the island has again and again been shelled by Allied warships.

This attention which the Allies are giving to Pantelleria is a tribute to the strategic importance of that tiny fragment of Italian soil. Lying just about halfway between Sicily and Tunisia, Pantelleria commands the narrow passageway between the western and the eastern Mediterranean. It is thus an obstacle which must be removed if Allied shipping is to operate freely between Gibraltar and Suez.

BUT THIS CIRCUMSTANCE provides only a partial explanation of the continuous land and sea attack on Pantelleria.

After all, the negative objective of immobilizing Pantelleria as a base from which Axis aircraft can harass Allied shipping was achieved, for all intents and purposes, some time ago, that is soon after the capture of Tunisia.

As for making the Mediterranean fully safe for our vessels, that will not be accomplished until the Axis has been driven out of all the islands in the Mediterranean and particularly Sicily, Sardinia and Crete.

Pantelleria's real importance to us at this time lies in the circumstance that it can serve as a guinea pig upon which immensely important tactical experiments can be tried.

ASIDE FROM the Eastern Front, where the German and Russian armies continue to be locked in a mighty struggle, the Allies and the Axis are separated at every point by a water gap.

To get at our enemies, therefore, whether by way of Norway or the Low Countries or France or Italy or the Balkans, an amphibious operation is necessary. Such an operation is always difficult and usually costly, particularly if the enemy is well entrenched, which is certainly the case in Occupied Europe.

Partly for this reason, partly because the raids of the R. A. F. and of the American Air Force on German centers have been very destructive and can, with a more lavish use of air power, be even more so, some argue that Allied efforts should now be concentrated on the effort to knock Germany out by bombing.

Actually, that is what we are now trying to do in the West. But we cannot afford to assume that the effort will succeed. Elementary prudence demands that we should be ready to follow up the air bombardment of Germany by a land invasion of the continent.

IT IS WITH THIS fact in mind that the Mediterranean islands in general and Pantelleria in particular assume tactical importance.

We now enjoy fairly complete air and naval superiority in the central Mediterranean. Enemy air losses have steadily increased during the past month's fighting in that region while ours have steadily diminished.

Raid after raid has been carried out against Italian cities and harbors and airfields in Sicily and Sardinia and Pantelleria, with little relative loss on our side, and not infrequently with no loss at all.

The time may not be far distant when we shall be able by a concentrated attack to saturate the weakened enemy defenses on one or more of those islands. When that happens an invasion effort should prove relatively easy. In fact, be indistinguishable from an occupation.

THIS REMAINS to be seen, however. The fact is that aside from commando raids on such points as the Lofoten Islands off Norway, St. Nazaire and Dieppe—the latter a particularly costly experiment—the Allies lack experience in landing operations in the European theater.

Such experience may very well be one of the major by-products of the coming assault on the Mediterranean islands, beginning perhaps, with Pantelleria.

Pantelleria has one airfield and that field is no longer usable. The air defense of the island, therefore, must come from Sicily, which is 75 miles away. But Sicily, in turn, is being subject to constant Allied air attacks so that the Axis may be unable to provide an effective air cover for Pantelleria.

Pantelleria, however, is heavily fortified and has few beaches. A frontal assault can only be successful, therefore, if through a lavish employment of air and sea power the Allies so weaken Pantelleria's defenses that the garrison will have no fight left in them by the time the Allied troops land.

GIVEN THE STRENGTH on land, at sea and in the air which the Allies now possess in the Mediterranean theater it is quite possible that when Pantelleria is invaded there will, simultaneously, be invasions of other Axis-held islands and of the Italian mainland.

In the meantime, however, what happens at Pantelleria will be worth watching. It may be the rehearsal of far more ambitious, far more crucial efforts which, sooner or later, the Allies will make elsewhere.

Lincoln Memorial

There is a Grecian temple in Washington which, like the man whose memory it enshrines, is so well proportioned that one does not realize its great size until one comes upon it. . . . A temple whose columns so easily hold up the weight above that one's spirit is pushed upward by their strength.

And inside this temple Abraham Lincoln sits on a Caesar's throne and looks out over Washington, and though in a formal place he is as much himself as an old shoe. . . . slouched down a bit in his seat, a faraway look on his face. . . . un-mindful of the cold granite about him, this man who came from a log cabin in Kentucky.

Wistfully, thoughtfully, the man from the log cabin looks out over the Capital of the Nation which he held together when all others cursed him for holding on.

Then there is a streak of sadness and hurt in that patient face. He thinks back, back to Anne Rutledge and her windswept grave; his old sweetheart to whom he was wedded, not through union, but through separation. He stares out through the columns and past them, back to a simple boyhood in Ohio where he learned that hard knocks come to an ugly child.

Look out over your great work, Abraham Lincoln, and pray that this vast Nation shall long endure.

Poll Tax

I want to take issue with The Post's editorial stand on the poll-tax bill. Admitting that the enforcement of a poll tax as a condition for the exercise of the franchise is undemocratic and unconstitutional, still The Post suggests that the issue should not be forced because there are other devices by which the Southern States could disfranchise their low income residents.

This is an untenable position. People who are interested in advancing the frontiers of American freedom meet issues as the Bourbons create them. When the poll tax is beaten they will move on to the next subterfuge by which adult Americans are denied the constitutional right to elect their governors.

Organize For War

In the discussion of inflation, black markets and rationing, no one seems to be paying much attention to the fact that we do not have an agency which is properly organized to handle the problem. We might have 10 main Federal departments: (1) Foreign Affairs, (2) Fiscal Affairs, (3) Production, including industry, agriculture, the Maritime Commission's shipbuilding functions, internal transportation, the Board of Economic Warfare's economic functions, wages-hours and union security, and various production loan agencies; (4) Defense, including all the armed forces; (5) Internal Security and Communications, including civilian defense, the FCC, Justice and Postoffice Departments; (6) Civilian Supplies; (7) Morale, including control over news, housing, medical care, child care, relief, etc., minorities and race relations, recreation, nutrition research and education; (8) Manpower, with control over job classification, testing, personnel registration, job shifting. Selective Service, unemployment insurance, old-age insurance, the Veterans' Administration and aids to soldiers' dependents; (9) Education and Training; (10) Food, with control over food distribution, food rationing, buying for account of the armed forces or foreign relief, food processing, determination of food needs, prices and controls over drugs and other somewhat related consumer goods.

Such a war setup as this leaves only major matters for coordination by the President and gives each war administrator power to deal with the matters which he must control to do his job.

The relationships of these departments to Congress can be improved if there are 10 members of the legislative body to serve as a legislative cabinet. Each departmental administrator would deal with the appropriate legislative Cabinet member in securing legislation. Adequate executive control of Congress might be obtained if the President should use his general war powers to activate policy by executive order in case the legislature does not act within a reasonable time on policy matters.

Congress itself might serve most usefully if it appointed joint committees in each of the main departments, groups, which committees would work with the main administrators and their staffs.

The suggested Food Administration would control the distribution and prices of food by taking control of it directly from the producer or at the chief bottlenecks through which it must pass in normal distribution. It would determine needs in terms of nutritional standards rather than customary consumption, and needs by areas and localities. It would allocate supplies from the chief distribution points to local markets. Since it would also control prices, allocations, rationing points, and profits could be adjusted to actual situations. At present the price functions of OPA and distribution functions of the Food Administration are uncoordinated.

Black markets must be controlled not only by control of primary markets and licensing of processors and wholesalers where appropriate. They must be controlled by proper pricing and profit policies. Both prices and wages must in some cases be "rolled back" if we are to avoid the black market and also prevent the demise of a large portion of the middle class; and if we are to prevent inflation brought about by uncontrolled prices the Government must buy up many small distributors, transfer them to other jobs, make them part owners in defense plants, and return their equities to them after the war. No amount of threatened prosecution or appeals to patriotism will prevent black markets or inflation.

The Once Over

Patriot In A Pinch

A patriot today is one who sacrifices ease and fun—Who, urged to save gas willingly, Does not exclaim, "This can't mean ME!"

He doesn't rate his car as more important than a Nation's war; He doesn't rate his right to ride Above all dangers far and wide.

He cannot hear his motor turn Without it, he can discern A constant whispering, "This should Be precious as a flier's blood!"

When he would take the flivver out He seems to hear his conscience shout; "This gas I'll use is just a bit . . . But what of some boy LACKING IT?"

"A gallon, maybe two or three . . . That makes no difference to me . . . But what of some lad on the wing To whom it could mean every-thing?"

A patriot's a fellow who Can sometimes walk a mile or two; Who can, perhaps, be somewhat late. And not feel anguish very great.

He is a man who doesn't fuss When he should take a motor bus; Who doesn't insist, beef or rant, And knows the boys in foxholes CAN'T!

Before the motor he would start. A small voice whispers, "Have a heart!" This gas won't mean much in a fight.

But on the other hand, it MIGHT!"

A patriot's a woman who Thinks of the red, the white, the blue, As colors in her flag, alas, And not as colors in the gas!

She is a lady, with no dread OF WALKING for a spoon of bread; No bridge game makes her turn quite green.

If she can't go by limousine.

A patriot is anyone Who knows the job that's to be done . . . Who pictures some boy in the sky Where "out of gas" means but to die!

Let's Be Fair

Don't sock your gas board With curses galore; It's troubled as you are, And probably more!

Don't cuss and mutter And give bitter stares; If you have your troubles, You oughta see THEIRS.

Don't squawk and bellow And call each a "grem"; You ought to see, mister, How YOU look to THEM!

Solution

Here is something that I insist Is true, from recent observance; The servant problem has ceased to exist.

For so, very nearly, have servants.

Mission to Moscow is described by Elmer Twitcheall as the most authentic picture based on actual facts, since Walt Disney's "Fantasia."

Heil Lewis!

Five hundred and thirty thousand miners of coal—coal to make steel, steel to build guns, tanks, planes and ships to win this war—out on strike, awaited the word of one man to go back to work.

May we not as well acknowledge the real authority in this land?

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

What Did The Test Prove?

SINCE THE action of Congress in extending the Trade Agreements Act has been regarded as a test of postwar policy, what did the test show?

Primarily, it seems to me, the test has shown that the procedure requiring a two-thirds vote of the Senate to ratify treaties is still, as it has been throughout American history, almost unworkable. But the test has also shown that the more democratic procedure of ratifying agreements by majority vote of both houses is workable.

It is true that the final vote in the Senate was 59 to 23, or better than two-thirds. But the Danaher, O'Mahoney, Maloney, and Reed amendments were rejected by majorities of less than two-thirds. So the test is a clear demonstration that the power of a minority of one House to veto treaties is as formidable as ever, and that the remedy is to place our reliance on the principle of majority rule by Congress as a whole.

NO CONSTITUTIONAL amendment is needed. For the resort to majority rule in international affairs is founded on ancient and ample precedent. In fact, it would have been impossible to carry on the business of the United States if international engagements had always been placed at the mercy of one-third of the Senate.

Under the agreements made with Canada in 1816 and 1817, there has been disarmament on the Great Lakes for more than a century. These agreements were made originally not by a treaty ratified by two-thirds of the Senate, but by the President under authorization of an ordinary act of Congress. This agreement has been one of the most beneficial and lasting in our history.

The treaty by which Texas was annexed to the Union was signed in April 1844 by Calhoun, the Secretary of State, and by the Texas representatives, Van Zandt and Henderson. In June the Senate rejected the treaty by a vote of 16 yeas and 35 nays. The Administration then decided to act by means of a "joint resolution of both Houses. This mode of effecting it," said Calhoun, "will have the advantage of requiring only a majority of the two Houses, instead of two-thirds of the Senate." In December the joint resolution was adopted in the House, 132 to 76, and in the Senate, 27 to 25. Thus we see that Texas could not have been admitted to the Union if the question had been left to a treaty submitted to the Senate.

NOR COULD the United States have acquired the Hawaiian Islands. President McKinley submitted two treaties of annexation to the Senate. The Senate would not act on either of them. Finally the President got a joint resolution of both Houses on July 7, 1898. We were then at war with Spain in the Pacific as well as in the Atlantic. Yet in the Senate the vote was only 42 to 21—a comfortable majority, but even under these exceptional conditions only exactly a two-thirds majority.

The Samoan Islands, now of such critical importance to us in the war with Japan, were acquired by the presidential action of the first Roosevelt in 1902 and 1904. Twenty-five years later Congress gave its approval by joint resolution.

It is well worth noting, too, that naval stations in Cuba were acquired by executive agreement in 1903. The authority to do this came from an appropriations act of 1901.

AS A MATTER of fact our greatest foreign policies have not been founded on treaties submitted to the Senate or shaped by them. The Monroe Doctrine was announced to Congress. Our Chinese policy of the Open Door and our various arrangements with Japan, such as the Root-Takahira and the Lansing-Ishihara agreements, have had greater effect than formal treaties. But they were not treaties, and were not placed at the mercy of a filibuster by one-third of one House of Congress.

Experience has shown, therefore, how right was Washington when he said one month after the Constitution was adopted that the "evil," when "one of the three is to have a negative control over the other two . . . will infallibly work its own cure." The cure has been the executive agreement, ratified usually by majorities of both Houses.

Otherwise, we should always be, as we have much too often been, the victims of the conditions which Alexander Hamilton described when he said of the two-thirds rule that "its real operation is to embarrass the Administration, to destroy the energy of the Government, and to substitute the pleasure, caprice, or artifices of an insignificant, turbulent, or corrupt junta, to the regular deliberations and decisions of a respectable majority."

THE CONCLUSION to be drawn from the test to which Congress has just been put is that the postwar agreements should be developed in the form not of treaties, but of measures which depend upon a respectable majority in both Houses of Congress. An obstructionist Senator who wants to complain about that will have a hard time persuading his colleagues, even more the people as a whole, that he has a good case.

The Gallup Poll

Surveys Find British and American People Favor World Police Force by Identical Vote

By George Gallup

Princeton, N. J., June 4.—If a group of conscientious reporters were to travel around England gathering the views of the common people concerning an international police force, then cross the Atlantic and talk to a cross-section of the American people from Maine to California, they would find that exactly the same proportion in each country—74 persons out of every 100—favor participation in a world police force after the war.

That is what public opinion surveys in the two countries found when they questioned the common people.

74 Per Cent Favorable Vote

If there is as much agreement between the British and American public on other postwar questions as there is on this one, many possible controversies involving the two countries will be avoided.

In Britain, the question put to voters by the British Institute of Public Opinion was this:

"After the war, would you like to see Britain joining with other countries to form an international police force?"

Yes 74%
No 16%
Undecided 10%

In the United States, the American Institute of Public Opinion put the question as follows:

"Should the countries fighting the Axis set up an international police force after the war is over to try to keep peace throughout the world?"

The results are:
Yes 74%
No 14%
Undecided 12%

Here in the United States, the attitude toward the international police force reveals public willingness to translate into action the belief that we can no longer afford to stay out of world affairs.

In a poll during March, more than three-quarters of those questioned across the country voted in favor of this country's taking an active part in world affairs after the present war is over.

Current Steps Asked

Furthermore, nearly two-thirds questioned in another recent poll thought the Government should take steps now to set up with our Allies a world organization to maintain the future peace of the world.

It is significant that the only official referendum which has been held in either Britain or the United States on a postwar problem—the referendum in Massachusetts last November—showed an overwhelming vote in favor of active American participation in postwar world affairs. The referendum was on the idea of requesting the President and Congress to call a world convention for the purpose of establishing a world union of democratic nations, and the vote was in favor by 75 per cent.

Bradley Promoted

Tunisian Leader

By the Associated Press
Maj. Gen. Omar Nelson Bradley, who commanded the American troops in the campaign in northern Tunisia which brought the fall of Bizerte, was nominated by President Roosevelt yesterday to be a lieutenant general. His permanent rank is lieutenant colonel in the Infantry.

Bradley's name led a list of 14 officers promoted for "conspicuous leadership during the recent Tunisian campaign," a War Department announcement said, adding: "Each of the officers played an outstanding part in bringing that operation to a successful conclusion, and their advancement will permit their assignments to positions in which their demonstrated ability may be used to best advantage."

Others in the list were: Brig. Gen. Stafford L. Irwin, a native of Fort Monroe, Va., who commanded the artillery of the Ninth Infantry Division; Brig. Gen. John K. Cannon of Salt Lake City, Deputy Commander of the Northwest African Tactical Air Force, and Brig. Gen. Lowell W. Rooks of Seattle, in charge of the operations division of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's Staff. Each was named to be a major general.

Also promoted were the following colonels, who will become brigadier generals: Frank U. Greer, Infantry, of Falls Church, Va.; Ray A. Dunn, Air Corps, Long Beach, Calif.; Maurice Rose, Cavalry, Denver; Reese M. Howell, Field Artillery, Salt Lake City; Edwin H. Randolph, Infantry, Decatur, Ill.; Carlyle H. Rideour, Air Corps, Pasadena, Calif.; Elbert L. Ford, Ordnance, Milford, Conn.; Robert V. Marais, Field Artillery, St. Martinsville, La.; Edward P. Curtis, Air Corps, Rochester, N. Y.; and Robert I. Stack, Infantry, Schenectady, N. Y.

Bradley, who took over the command of the Second Corps from Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton when the type of operations shifted from armored warfare to one principally of ground troops, is a former commander of West Point and of the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga. He was born in Clark, Mo., February 12, 1893, and was a member of the 1915 class at West Point. Bradley's wife and daughter live at West Point.

Group Favors Credit Agency, Bars Subsidies

A bill extending the life of the Commodity Credit Corp. two more years and increasing its borrowing power by one billion dollars was approved by the Senate Banking Committee yesterday after it wrote in a restriction against use of any of the funds to pay subsidies in the food price stabilization program. Acting Chairman Bankhead (Democrat) of Alabama said the antitrust amendment was adopted by a 3-to-2 vote.

The House Banking Committee this week approved a CCC extension containing a somewhat broader antitrust provision, barring use not only of CCC funds but also the funds of any other Government agency. The House bill provided for only a half-billion-dollar increase in the borrowing power of the corporation, now $2,650,000,000.

Food Administrator Chester C. Davis urged the Senate Committee last Thursday not to restrict CCC's operations by "a narrow prohibition of subsidies." He said he thought it would be dangerous to line the price of the country up into hostile camps, one pro-subsidy, the other antitrust.

The OPA yesterday cut the creamery price of butter 5 cents a pound, preparatory to a corresponding reduction in retail prices next Thursday.

While technically the butter subsidy program started on June 1, the price roll back did not become a reality until the issuance of yesterday's order to cut prices in the same amount of the Government subsidy which will be paid by a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The retail price will not be changed until next Thursday, officials said, because the butter now in the hands of retailers is all pre-subsidy butter, and it will take several days before the cut rate butter will reach retailers.

Fuel Oil Regulations

Ration Area Unchanged Despite Lines

The whys and the hows of the fuel oil and kerosene rationing for next year were explained by the Office of Price Administration yesterday in the following questions and answers:

Q. In what areas will fuel oil and kerosene be rationed?
A. In the same 33 States and the District of Columbia where it was rationed last winter.

Q. Why?
A. Because transportation facilities remain insufficient, despite new pipeline lines, and because direct military needs have increased even more than our enormous expansion of pipeline facilities can provide for.

Q. When will the new ration be issued?
A. Plans have been made to issue the coupons during June to those who live at the same address as last year, so that they can begin filling up their tanks in July.

Q. Why so early?
A. This will help them solve manpower and truck shortages in filling the consumers' tanks early and so add appreciably to the total storage capacity in the rationed areas. In addition war price and rationing boards will be very busy in the succeeding months, so that consumers, to be assured that their applications will be taken care of promptly, must file them early. The application information also tells dealers and the Government how much of each type of oil to bring into each neighborhood for next year.

Q. How will the renewal be made?
A. The entire process will be by mail. Early in June local war price and rationing boards will begin mailing the simple renewal form to be filled out and mailed back to the boards just as soon as possible.

Q. Does it take much time to fill out the renewal form?
A. No. They ask:

1. The applicant's name and address.

2. Address where ration will be used (if different from the applicant's).

3. Name of last year's applicant (if different from the present applicant's).

4. Name of applicant's supplier and the kind of oil used.

Q. Will I be required to report any unused portion of my last year's ration, or turn in any unused coupons?
A. No. But you will be given opportunity in the application to state that you need less oil next year and that you will, therefore, accept a specific number of gallons less than last year's basic ration.

Q. Will boards in any instance reduce the new ration below last year's ration?
A. Not unless as an applicant you state that you are willing to accept less. Also in any case where the board finds an error in last year's ration which gave you more than you were entitled to, it will correct the error.

Q. We have a baby, born last month. Will this entitle me to a children's allowance next winter in addition to the basic ration?
A. Yes. But if there is already a child under four years of age in the family, the new baby will entitle you to a second children's allowance.

Q. How do I apply for the extra children's allowance?
A. You may apply on a special form later in the summer or early fall. The time and procedure will be announced by OPA.

Q. Because my aunt has come to live with us, we are opening another room. This means heating space in addition to that which I reported last year. Will I be entitled to a larger ration?
A. Yes. But you apply now only for the basic ration on the regular renewal form. Anyone who has had a change of circumstances entitling him to a larger ration may apply for the extra amount at a date and according to procedure to be announced later.

Durr Renews Attack on Cox In FCC Row

(See the editorial "Cox Case" on Page 8.)

Federal Communications Commissioner Clifford J. Durr yesterday asked the House Judiciary Committee for an opportunity to prove that Representative Cox (Democrat) of Georgia "is not a suitable person" to investigate the FCC.

Durr said that since his petition went to the Judiciary Committee, witnesses in the House FCC probe had continued to undergo examination behind closed doors, with "only Congressman Cox and members of the staff present."

"Feeling as strongly as I do about the importance of the investigatory power of Congress," said Durr, "I would regret being placed in a position which could be construed as one of hostility to the exercise of that power or as an indication that I have something to hide from Congress."

"However, I am equally strong in my reluctance to testify before the committee, for I am convinced that its chairman and staff have purposes to serve which are inconsistent with a fair and impartial determination of the facts."

Durr asked that he be permitted to bring witnesses and documentary evidence to the requested hearing before the Judiciary Committee.

Department Stores Close Saturdays Starting July 10

Just as they have for many years past, Washington's department stores will close their doors to customers Friday evenings and will remain closed throughout eight Saturdays, beginning July 10.

About nine of the city's largest emporiums will adhere to this practice, by which they will achieve two objectives besides beating the heat.

They will relieve pressure on their employees, overworked because of the labor shortage, and lessen the load carried by the transit system.

These problems—transportation and labor shortages—have also figured in the decision of local stores not to remain open an additional night during the week.

House Committee To Hear OPA On Grade Labeling Price Plan

The House subcommittee investigating proposed grade labeling for merchandise will hear OPA's side of the controversy next week.

Chairman Boren (Democrat) of Oklahoma, said yesterday OPA officials will appear and add:

"Now that Galbraith (J. K. Galbraith, deputy administrator in charge of prices) is out, we want to study the plans and viewpoints of the men who succeeded him." He said Galbraith's successors, Donald Wallace and Austin C. Hoffman, "will be given a chance to say what they have to say."

Boren also indicated Dr. Ernest Haley, director of OPA's Textile and Leather Price Division, would

New Carbine Is Patterned After Air Rifle

By the Associated Press

Port Clinton, Ohio, June 4.—The B-B gun, a toy with which most American boys have riddled empty tomato cans, provided ordnance and industrial gun designers with the idea for one of the Army's newest weapons.

The new firearm—a vicious little 30-caliber carbine combining lightness, fire-power and accuracy at battle ranges—was demonstrated to newsmen for the first time today by the War Department's Cleveland ordnance district.

Production now is nearing full scale at the Standard Products Co.'s plant in this Lake Erie town.

The carbine is a short-barreled rifle, only 36 inches long. Like the B-B gun, it weighs less than six pounds, including strap and carrying clip. This is about three pounds lighter than the newer Garand.

Unlike the air rifle, it spits 15 high-velocity slugs from one clip with deadly accuracy. The velocity of its bullets at 53 feet from the muzzle is 1900 feet per second, razzing next to the larger Garand rifle's 2675 feet per second and considerably above older types of hunting rifles which ranged less than 1800 yards.

"In combat, it has been the best weapon for the individual ever turned out," says Col. Forrest C. Shaffer, commanding officer of nearby Erie Proving Ground.

"The carbine is especially good for jungle fighting. A soldier can carry four or five times as much ammunition for this gun as he can for the Garand. It's very effective at short range, having greater accuracy than the 45-caliber pistol which is handled expertly by only a few men at ranges over 50 feet."

The new weapon rapidly is replacing the 45-caliber pistol as a standard sidearm, the colonel says. Easy to handle, it can be fired "commando style" from the hip or from the shoulder.

British Drop Wounded In Parachutes, Fly On

Lisbon, June 4 (AP).—A British bomber, damaged in an aerial fight, was reported to have dropped seven wounded men by parachute near Esmoriz in northern Portugal about noon today and then to have proceeded northward.

The wounded were said to have included British, American and Canadian fliers, who were taken to a hospital at Oporto. They were reported to have said they were wounded during a violent fight over the Bay of Biscay this morning.

Captives Held In U. S.

36,688 Prisoners Here

The Army announced yesterday that 36,688 enemy war prisoners are now held in 21 prison camps in the United States, including Camp Meade, Md.

The total includes 22,100 Germans, 14,516 Italians and 62 Japanese.

The Japanese are held at Camp McCoy, Wis. Both German and Italians are held at Crossville, Tenn., in separate compounds. The 10 other camps at which German prisoners are held are Camp Breckinridge, Ky.; Chaffee, Ark.; Gruber, Okla.; Hereford, Tex.; Huntsville, Tex.; Roswell, N. Mex.; Stringtown, Okla.; Angel Island, Calif.; Blanding, Fla., and Meade, Md.

In addition to those at Crossville, Italians are held at Camps Atterbury, Ind.; Carson, Colo.; Clark, Mo.; Florence, Ariz.; Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.; Ogden, Utah; Phillips, Kan.; Weingarten, Mo., and Wheeler, Ga.

Temporary Camps

Angel Island, Calif., Camp Blanding, Fla., and Fort Meade, Md., are being used, the Army said, only temporarily as prison camps. The others are permanent. Their combined capacity is approximately 55,000, but steps already are being taken to provide additional camps and to expand those in existence.

As soon as facilities are available, either the Germans or Italians at Crossville will be moved to another camp.

(The War Department said that in the future news reporters may visit the prison camps, and descriptions of the camps and of prisoner activities will be permitted, as well as descriptions of prisoners working outside the camps.)

Interviews with prisoners will not be permitted, however, nor will publication of photographs showing recognizable features of the prisoners.)

Compounds in Stockade

The standard stockade at each of the camps, the Army said, is an enclosure within a double barbed wire fence, with guard towers covering a narrow alley between the fences. The stockade is divided into three compounds, each containing hot shelters, mess halls, toilet facilities and other installations for 1000 prisoners. Within these compounds the prisoners are permitted to circulate freely, but gated gates restrict passage between the compounds.

The typical prison camp housing 3000 prisoners, the Army said, requires the services of 506 officers and enlisted men of the Army, who are housed outside the stockade in nearby barracks and offices.

This guard and administrative detachment is made up of three military police escort companies, 21 additional officers, and three attached officers. The companies usually are rotated—one on actual guard manning the towers and gates, another company in the alert, and the third engaged in tactical and other training exercises or in supervising and guarding work details.

Formed Into Units

Prisoners are organized into companies of 250, each under an American Army officer, and in turn battalions are formed within the camp.

The prisoner company commander is assisted by Army enlisted men, including a first sergeant, a mess and supply sergeant, a clerk, interpreter and cook. The cook, however, merely supervises the preparation of food by the prisoners, who are permitted and expected to organize and administer their own affairs as much as possible.

In cases where the prison camps are located on a Regular Army post, the commanding officer of the post also commands the prison camp. In other cases, the commanding officer is designated by the commanding general of the service command in which the camp is located.

The Army said the office of the provost marshal general has found that many of the prisoners held in the United States have special

'Patronage Bill' Stalls

No Vote Expected This Week

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Voting on the McKellar bill to subject 30,000 to 35,000 Federal jobholders receiving $4500 or more a year to Senate confirmation was postponed yesterday until next week, with leaders predicting that the measure may be temporarily sidetracked to make way for appropriations bills, including those for Agriculture and Navy.

Senator McKellar (Democrat) of Tennessee, leading off the second day's debate for his bill, called for its adoption to bring a return to "the good old constitutional system," of appointing office holders by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

McNary "Squawks"

Minority Leader McNary (Republican) of Oregon wanted to know where the Constitution said the Senate should confirm all employees receiving $4500 or more, but McKellar said that was a provision so clear that it would prevent any "fingling" by the bureau about what jobs were policy making. A group of members led by Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming is seeking to scrap the salary qualification, narrowing the review bill to cover around 10,000 to 15,000 jobholders.

Senator Mead (Democrat) of New York, with the backing of Senator Hatch (Democrat) of New Mexico, argued that the bill should have been studied by Civil Service Committee, rather than the Judiciary Committee, and announced that he will seek to send it there for study. Senator Chandler (Democrat) of Kentucky said, however, that the argument would have been stronger if it had been made when the bill was introduced, not after the Judiciary Committee had approved the measure by a 10-4 vote.

Hatch Protest

Hatch said he wanted the record to show that opponents of the McKellar bill favor the principle of requiring Senate confirmation for all persons whose jobs are genuinely policy making, but he protested McKellar's plan and said, "Don't take a steam shovel to repair a watch."

Mead, while defending the civil service system of Federal appointments, said the OPA and WPA and other emergency war agencies had departed from the civil service rules—"What they have done is to pick the employee, then write the qualifications for the job, and finally ask the Civil Service Commission to rubber-stamp it." Results of this procedure, said Mead, were nepotism in the agencies, discrimination and in one instance politics, but he said all that had been corrected.

Rehearing Held On Appeal Of D. C. Utility

A rehearing in the Washington Gas Light appeal was held yesterday by the United States Court of Appeals here with Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner, Associate Justice Justin Miller and Justice Morris A. Soper of the Fourth Judicial Circuit in Baltimore, presiding.

The rehearing was necessitated by the resignation of Associate Justice Fred M. Vinson who was appointed last week by President Roosevelt as director of the Office of Economic Stabilization. Judge Vinson was a member of the court which heard arguments in the case last month.

An appeal was requested by the gas company after Justice F. Dickinson Letts in District Court several months ago disallowed a rate increase granted by the Public Utilities Commission which would have amounted to approximately $200,000 a year. In Justice Letts' opinion the increase was illegal under provisions of the Price Control Act and was also inflationary.

Attorney E. Barrett Prettyman, representing the gas company, told the court that existing laws left the regulation of utility rates with the public utility commissions and that the District P. U. C. had conformed with all the regulations of the OPA in giving that agency a fair and impartial hearing when it objected to the increase.

Attorney Lloyd Harrison, representing the P. U. C., told the court that the OPA had been in the case from the beginning and that the commission had conformed with all of the regulations of the Price Control Act.

Attorneys Harry R. Booth and David Cavers, representing the OPA and the Office of Economic Stabilization, argued that although the act did not specifically state so, it was the intention of the act to give the OPA right to interfere in utility rate increases when interference was justified.

A decision in the case is expected before the summer recess of the court, which begins on June 30.

skills, but the use to which these skills may be put is restricted.

The use of prisoners as emergency farm labor will be confined to operation requiring 12 or more men at one time, the Army said, such as cotton picking and harvesting. Other occupations in which the Army expects to employ large numbers of prisoners are road building, irrigation, dam construction, and similar large projects.

Justice Laws Appointed to OPA Tribunal

Justice Bolitha J. Laws of District Court was appointed yesterday by Chief Justice Harlan F. Stone of the United States Supreme Court to fill the vacancy in the Emergency Court of Appeals here created when Justice Fred M. Vinson was appointed by President Roosevelt as director of the Office of Economic Stabilization.

Laws was appointed chief judge of the Emergency Appeals Court was Justice Albert Branson Maris of the Third Judicial Circuit, in Philadelphia. Justice Maris, with Justice Calvert Magruder of the First Judicial Circuit, Boston, sat on the Emergency Appeals bench with Justice Vinson who acted as chief judge.

The Emergency Court of Appeals was created by the Price Control Act of 1942. The tribunal's function is to decide litigation brought against the administrator of the Office of Price Administration.

Justice Laws was appointed to the District Court by President Roosevelt in June, 1938. At the time of his appointment he was president of the District Bar Association and a member of the law firm of Cromelin and Laws.

Justice Laws is a former assistant general counsel for the United States Shipping Board and served as an assistant United States Attorney here from 1914 to 1920. He is a native of the District of Columbia and has his residence at 7 Oxford Street, Chevy Chase, Md.

The appointment was considered in court circles as a signal honor inasmuch as Justice Laws is the first United States district judge to be appointed to the emergency court. The other appointments, it was pointed out, have all been made from the appellate bench, Justice Laws will continue on the District Court bench while serving the emergency court.

Leesburg Woman Seeks Assembly Seat

"Back in January, I promised Howard Rogers, delegate from Loudoun County to the State General Assembly in Richmond, that if he ran in the next election, I would do all I could to aid his opponent's victory."

Mrs. Nellie Fletcher of Leesburg, Va., hopes to keep that promise. Discovering that no one planned to oppose Rogers in the primary elections scheduled for August 3, she announced her own candidacy for the delegate's office last Saturday.

Mrs. Fletcher is the first woman from Loudoun County to try for that office and if her fight to restore passenger service on the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad is an example, a rousing battle can be expected.

Nellie Fletcher has had a varied career. During World War I she did desk work as a member of the Yeomanettes and was given an honorable discharge at the end of the war. For many years she has done private legal and scientific work, acting as private secretary to her husband, W. A. Fletcher, an inventor and research expert. With him she holds several patents relating to television, fluorescent lighting and inventions for the present war, the nature of which cannot be disclosed now.

In 1940 she started her fight for the passenger service between Washington and Purcellville, Va., appearing before the House District Committee, Senator Burton's Committee, and the State Corporation Commission. As a result of her efforts the railroad was put back on a trial run from March to June 21.

Concerning her most recent efforts to aid her native county, Mrs. Fletcher said: "I plan to enter this battle with clean hands and keep them that way"—and submitted this platform: "I favor the election of local government officials in keeping with the Bill of Rights, where equality and rights of all men are fully disclosed, and I therefore favor the true source of power, that of the people. I favor the fullest extension of the principle of local government and local self-determination, that the board of supervisors may have and exercise to the fullest extent the control in all matters under the direct law and guidance of the Constitution. I favor a vigorous postwar program for Loudoun County, both from a financial and welfare standpoint; good schools, good highways, a good health program. I seek the preservation of our human rights with equality in its fullest interpretation."

Rations to Be More Liberal For Hospitals

OPA spokesmen unofficially promised that when Washington hospital dieticians apply to their local ration boards on June 15 for their July-August canned foods allotments, they will find a far more liberal allowance for hospital patients awaiting them.

By that date, they assert, the long-overdue amendments to Ration Order No. 5 (canned and processed foods) which seek to give hospitals and other similar institutions a larger amount of food under the rationing system, will have been incorporated and in effect.

Since last December, local hospital dieticians have found themselves faced with the dilemma of adhering to OPA regulations while trying to fill essential diets for their patients. With kitchen help scarce and prices of fresh fruits and vegetables rising steadily, they declared recently that if more generous canned goods allotments weren't forthcoming soon, patients would suffer.

"Final considerations" on the amendments started at OPA several weeks ago.

Of all the blundering super-silly outfits, the A. A. U. has come along to take some kind of a prize for messing up a situation. The A. A. U. is the Amateur Athletic Union, horrified at anything with a professional touch, but it couldn't have been more professional at the art of butchering up the works if it had made a life study of it.

I'm thinking, of course, about that ruling by the A. A. U. the other day when it announced that Gunder Haegg, Sweden's holder of seven world track records, must run in the national A. A. U. meet on June 19-20, or be suspended.

To come up with that one, the A. A. U. had to hurdle all previous records for short-sightedness, nonsense and unhelpful reasoning. Haegg asked out of the meet because he didn't feel that he could shake his sea legs after a month on a tanker making the crossing, in time to be in condition to run a good race. But the A. A. U. is refusing to hold still for that request.

As the A. A. U. sees it, Haegg "is duty bound to compete, because he was invited to the national championships and accepted. Once an amateur athlete agrees to compete in a meet he is bound to that agreement by the rules of the A. A. U. and the International Federation."

Nuts to the A. A. U. If an amateur athlete doesn't feel like running in a certain race, particularly when he has such a valid excuse as Haegg, he's under obligation to nobody. The A. A. U. isn't paying Haegg a nickel, at least under its own rules, he's not supposed to profit financially, and the question of when and where he'll run would seem to be up to Haegg, himself, not the A. A. U. or any other organization.

Aside from trying to be high-handed about it, the A. A. U. is defeating the whole purpose of the Haegg visit by its drastic threat to suspend him if he doesn't run in their pet meet, the national A. A. U. championships. Haegg is supposed to be coming over here on a good-will mission from a friendly country at a time when this nation needs all the good will it can muster in Europe, but the A. A. U. is treating him like a suspicious character.

Somebody ought to acquaint the A. A. U. with some of the facts of life, viz: Haegg is from Sweden. He's a national hero over there. The Swedes take their track very seriously. Haegg is Sweden's Babe Ruth. They won't let it if he is slapped in the face by the A. A. U. Sweden's a country the United States is eager to cultivate in the International crisis when friends in Europe are not only valuable, but more scarce than the A. A. U. ought to make itself.

The A. A. U. has tossed the fat in the fire at a time when this country's statesmen are anxious to make everything sweetness and light between the United States and so potential an ally as Sweden. Maybe we overestimate the reaction that Sweden will have as a result of the threatened ban on Haegg, but on every hand we hear that his countrymen idolize the fellow to a degree beyond our comprehension of foot-racing fame.

It's a silly stand the A. A. U. takes, too, in pointing out that "unlike a professional debut, there is no financial loss sustained should Haegg suffer a defeat in his first American start. We're sure the American public will appreciate he'll be competing under a handicap in running two weeks after a 26-day sea voyage."

The fact that Haegg wouldn't be getting a fair shake if he were to run before he was ready is too blithely overlooked by the A. A. U. The Swedes don't want to see him beaten under any conditions. And Americans would get no satisfaction out of seeing an American beat a Haegg who wasn't in shape. There's no same reason for asking Haegg to run before he is ready.

Of course it would pull the A. A. U. chestnuts out of the fire very nicely, if Haegg did run in the Randall Island meet on June 21-22. It needs him to make the meet an attraction. His mere appearance would do that. For crowd-drawing purposes, Haegg wouldn't have to win. He need only run. That would make the meet a success for the A. A. U. If it was not a success for Haegg, that would be Haegg's tough luck, as the A. A. U. sees it. Shame on the A. A. U.

Yanks Defeat Browns, 6 to 4, In 10th; Stephens Hits 2 Homers

New York, June 4 (AP)—It took the Yankees 10 innings to lick Vernon Stephens today but they finally did it on a tenth-inning homer by Joe Gordon that gave the league leaders a 6 to 4 victory over the last-place St. Louis Browns.

Stephens, back in the Browns' line-up for about 10 days before he has to report to his draft board for a final physical examination and possible induction into the armed forces, accounted for all his team's runs. He belted a home run with the bases empty in the fourth inning, another with Milton Byrne on base in the sixth and tied the game up in the ninth when he singled, moved around to third on Mike Chartak's base hit and an error and ran home after a long fly by Harold Clift.

The Brownie shortstop also made a double—liff off Spud Chandler—and lifted his batting average to .404.

Wright Scores In Fifth Round

New York, June 4.—Old man Chalky Wright did a favor for the slim crowd of customers who turned out in the Madison Square Garden "Turkish Bath" this gleaming evening by taking only five beats to flatten Phil Terranova and thereby qualify for another shot at the featherweight championship he once held.

After flooring the zoot-suit youngster from the Bronx with a straight right-hand rifle-shot for an eight-count in the second round of this scheduled 15-rounder, and then punning his face to a bloody smear in the next two beats, Chalky finally pulled the trigger on his big gun at 1:46 of the fifth and Phil took the fall count.

Plane Crash At Sea Fatal To Grid Star

Served as Ensign On Carrier; Rescue Boat Fails to Recover Body

By the Associated Press
Omaha, June 4.—Naval Ensign Nile C. Kinnick, Jr., the Iowa football great who loved the battle of the gridiron but who looked on war as only a grim job to perform, has been killed in action.

Parents of the 24-year-old flier, who was attached to an aircraft carrier, said today they received word from the Navy Department that Nile had been killed in action and that his body had not been recovered.

At Washington, the Navy said Kinnick was lost June 2 when his airplane made a forced landing at sea.

A crash boat arrived at the scene within a few minutes but was unable to find Kinnick, who had been seen to fall free of the plane, it reported.

Kinnick, All-American halfback at the University of Iowa in 1939, had enrolled in the Navy in September, 1941. He began training in Kansas City, December 3, 1941, three days before Pearl Harbor.

His athletic career brought him a full state of national honors. In addition to the All-American rating Kinnick won the Heisman trophy given by the Downtown Athletic Club of New York City, the Maxwell trophy presented by the Maxwell Club of Philadelphia, and the Walter Camp award of the Touchdown Club of Washington, D. C.

He was named athlete of the year in the Associated Press poll, finishing eight points ahead of baseball star Joe DiMaggio. He won the Chicago Tribune trophy as the most valuable player in the Big Ten Conference.

It was when he was presented the Heisman trophy that Kinnick said "I thank God I was born to the gridirons of the Midwest and not the battlefields of Europe. I can confidently say that the boy of this country would rather win this trophy than the Croix de Guerre."

But when he saw that war was coming he gave up his studies for a law career to enlist.

"Nile saw there was a job to do, and knew he was one of the young men qualified to do it," said his father, an analyst in the Federal Land Bank of Omaha.

After completing his football and college careers in 1939, Kinnick remained at Iowa to study law and serve as freshman football coach. He had completed a year of study when he enrolled in the Navy.

Pulled "Iron-Man" Stunt
On successive Saturdays in the fall of 1939 Kinnick played against Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Purdue, Notre Dame and Wisconsin without relief and then went 42 minutes against Northwestern in the finale before getting a rest.

Probably his most spectacular afternoon was at the expense of Notre Dame. It was during this game that Kinnick, dazed in a previous scrimmage, turned the Iowa backfield inside out by putting the right halfback on the left and the left half on the right and the running play to the wrong side for a touchdown.

Iowa won, 7 to 6, with the Hawkeyes getting into scoring position on a diversified attack in which every other play was a forward pass. On the intervening formations Kinnick's swollen hands began regain some of their sense of touch to enable him to throw the ball again on the next play.

In all, he personally figured in 107 of Iowa's 130 points that fall.

Dr. Eddie Anderson, furloughed Iowa head football coach now a major in the U. S. Army Medical Corps, said of Kinnick:

"He was loved by everyone who knew him; his kindness and consideration for others stamped him as a typically ideal American."

Meeting Plans Churchmen To Discuss Peace World

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

Discussion of postwar problems will dominate many religious conferences in this area this summer, according to information reaching this department.

Outstanding from the viewpoint of peace, will be the regional conference on a Just and Durable Peace, June 16 to 18, at Hood College, Frederick, Md., sponsored by the Washington Federation of Churches and the Baltimore Council of Churches.

Some of the Nations' outstanding clergymen and laymen will participate in the parley, including Dr. William C. Hocking of Harvard University; Dr. James G. McDonald, chairman of President Roosevelt's Committee on Political Refugees; Dr. Mordecai Johnson, Howard University president; and Dr. Walter Van Kirk, executive secretary, department of international justice and good will, Federal Council of Churches. Dr. S. Paul Schilling, pastor of Brookland Methodist Church here, will be conference chairman, and the Right Rev. Noble C. Powell, bishop coadjutor of the Maryland Episcopal Diocese, will preside.

As a "warm-up" for the conference seminars on the political, social, economic and religious phases of the postwar world have been held this winter. Conference findings will be published in a form available to churches for further study.

Spiritual Morale
Meanwhile, plans are going forward for the twenty-second annual summer conference of the D. C. Organized Bible Class Association September 4-6 at Western Maryland College, Westminster, where spiritual morale—a "must" for building any kind of a Christian position in the world—will be the theme. Conference speaker will be the Rev. Dr. Schilling, Ph.D., pastor of the Broadway (New York City) Temple Methodist Church.

Church Heads Jailed
On the international religious front, news has just reached the United Nations Information Service, New York City, that Prof. Halesby, head of the Interim Council for all Norwegian religious denominations, and his chief aide, Dr. Ludvig Hope, have been arrested by the Nazis and interned in the Grini concentration camp.

Their arrest was said to have

Keller Church Will Install Assistant

The congregation of Keller Memorial Lutheran Church, Ninth and Maryland Avenue Northeast, tomorrow at 11 a. m. will formally install the Rev. Cedric W. Tilberg, B. D., as assistant pastor. Dr. J. Harold Mumper, pastor, will officiate.

Mr. Tilberg, who was ordained to the ministry May 26 by the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Central Pennsylvania, was student assistant pastor at Keller Church from June, 1941, until July, 1942, returning to Gettysburg Theological Seminary in the fall of 1942 to complete his studies. He was graduated from Gettysburg College in 1939 with a bachelor of arts degree and from its seminary May 14 with a bachelor of divinity degree.

Mr. Tilberg is a native of Kansas, and is a son of Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur E. Tilberg formerly of Dwight, Kans. Dr. Tilberg is dean of Gettysburg College and was formerly dean of Midland College, Fremont, Neb.

The charge to the new pastor will be delivered by the Rev. Dwight F. Putman, D. D., pastor of Christ Lutheran Church, Gettysburg, Pa., of which Pastor Tilberg is now a member. The charge to the congregation will be delivered and the service of installation will be conducted by the Rev. W. C. Waltemyer, Ph. D., representing the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of the State of Maryland, of which Mr. Tilberg now becomes a member.

The Rev. Mr. Tilberg will preach his first sermon as pastor at the vespers service at 7:45 p. m. A reception for the new associate and for all members of the congregation who have united since Easter, 1942, will be held in the social hall on Tuesday at 8 o'clock.

been attributed to a protest note sent to Quilting and in which the Interim Council vigorously opposed the use of Norwegian forced labor on German fortifications.

The letter also pointed out that conscription of men and women for forced labor in Germany while Norway is still in a state of war with Germany contravenes international law. It added that Norwegian labor conscripts are placed under German military command, wear German uniforms, do military exercises and can be ordered to take part in military operations.

Commenting on the arrest of the Norwegian churchmen the Swedish liberal religious paper Svenska Morgensbladet wrote: "Since the protest from the church leaders has been met in this manner by the political authorities, this must be interpreted as threatening. It shows that they (the Quilting government) place greater importance on total mobilization than the Norwegians previously thought."

Churches Plan Children's Day Tomorrow

Children's Day will be observed in a number of local and nearby churches tomorrow, and other congregations are planning a similar observance for next Sunday.

At Ninth Street Christian Church, Ninth and D Streets Northeast, children will present a program tomorrow at 9:45 a. m., and a foreign missions offering will be received.

Dr. George Earle Owen, Living Link missionary for Ninth Street Church, will speak at 11 a. m., when the junior church will attend in a body and the children's chapel choir will sing. Dr. and Mrs. Owen will leave shortly for Buenos Aires to engage in missionary work.

A service of dedication for children and a missionary pageant directed by Mrs. Charles H. Frick will highlight the children's day commemoration at 9:30 a. m. at Mount Rainier Christian Church. The Rev. Charles H. Frick is pastor.

Bishop O. J. Hart To Confirm Class

The Right Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D.D., bishop coadjutor of Pennsylvania, will preach and confirm a class tomorrow at the 11 o'clock service in St. John's Episcopal Church, Lafayette Square, where he was rector for six years.

Prior to his consecration last October, Bishop Hart served as captain chaplain at Fort Dix, N. J., during World War I. He was rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Lafayette Square, where he was rector for six years.

Other services are 8 a. m.—Holy Communion; 9:30 a. m., Sunday School and Adult Bible classes, and 4 p. m., service in French, the Rev. Andre P. Liotard, preacher.

Prayer Corner Dedicated

The Rev. Richard H. Wilmer, vicar of St. John's Episcopal Church, Mount Rainier, Md., stands in the war prayer corner that was dedicated Ascension Day—Thursday. All residents of the community are invited to the corner to pray for loved ones in the armed forces. The church's honor roll is on wall near a flag, the latter a gift of the Rev. Walter Plumley, a former vicar of St. John's, now a chaplain abroad.

Leader Scans Crime Increase

By the Associated Press
A decline in church attendance has corresponded with the upswing in crime in America, Harold Levander, South St. Paul attorney, told delegates to the eighty-fourth annual convention of the Evangelical Lutheran Augustana Synod of North America this week at Minneapolis.

At the bottom of the juvenile delinquency problem, Levander, president of the Minnesota Conference of Lutheran Brotherhood, added, is the fact that "there are 12 million children in the United States who have never seen the inside of a Sunday School."

He appealed for a return to Christianity as a step toward curing these and other ills facing the Nation today.
In his annual message, Dr. P. O. Bersell, synod president, told the delegates foreign missions have suffered a serious temporary setback because of the war.

Stephan Again Asks Retrial Order In Treason Case

Cincinnati, June 4 (AP).—Max Stephan, Detroit restaurateur convicted of treason, asked the Sixth United States Circuit Court of Appeals again today to order retrial of his case.

Once sentenced to be hanged, and scheduled to go into court at Detroit tomorrow for resentence, Stephan appealed from an order issued May 22 by Judge Arthur Tuttle, denying him a new trial.

The Supreme Court of the United States early this week refused for a third time to review the case.

GIVE THE WAR MEAT BOARD A CHANCE BEFORE SUBSIDIZING

A War Meat Board has just been established by the government.

It is composed of representatives of the U.S. Armed Forces, the War Food Administration, the Office of Price Administration and, as consultants, experienced men of the meat packing industry as selected by the government.

The first meeting of this board is set for Monday, June 7.

The function of this War Meat Board is to manage America's wartime meat supply.

This management, as projected, aims to coordinate the consumer rationing program and the governmental meat procurement program from day to day and week to week in such a way as to keep the total demand for meat in balance with the available supply.

This will mean that our armed forces, our civilians and our allies will reap the greatest good from this country's meat resources.

We believe every thinking American—every head of an American family and every woman who buys meat for a family—wants this program to succeed.

Anything that hinders or endangers this effort, no matter how sincere or patriotic its motives, is clearly out of place.

The proposed meat subsidy, put into operation at this time, might easily start off the work of the board under a grave handicap.

This proposed subsidy can cost American taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars, without solving major wartime meat problems such as the Black Market, but if we give the War Meat Board a chance, it may find an answer to these problems and yet save the taxpayers money.

The meat industry hereby goes on record as recommending the postponement of the proposed meat subsidy until all facts are in, all voices are heard, all sides are considered and the War Meat Board has had the opportunity to weigh them in the interests of the public good.

Again we say—Give the War Meat Board a chance before subsidizing

Evicting the tenants, a United States marshal said that three of these four places were just as clean as tenants' efforts could make them. Rickety steps, toilets stopped up, kerosene lamps—an eviction officer said the tenants were clean.

Ruhland's idea in having dogs on leash was to protect from the bites of other dogs, might be infected, as well prevent the muzzled dogs doing any biting of their own. Although there is therefore way to make such quarantine compulsory, Ruhland appealed to owners to adopt it voluntarily for protection of the public as well as of the pets.

Findings in Cotton

By Jeanne Contini

From our inexorable pursuit of cottons, one might be led to suspect that we are wrapped up, heart and soul, in cotton batting. Still, in a climate where the mere effort of ignoring the heat is enough to dampen the most stoical brow, we believe it's our job to keep on tracking down the good ones. Therefore, our fashion policy continues to adhere closely to the clothesline.

PIQUE SUIT:

Light weight and simple to climb into. The fabric has enough body to hold its tailoring and consequently avoids the faint essence of pajama that clings to some of its thinner sisters. Small clusters of white dots like powdered sugar give a fresh stimulus to the dark or bright backgrounds. Of course it's a soap-suds veteran. A white pique beret would make a nice cap to this costume. About $9.

CHAMBRAY SUIT:

This is the cotton that comes in delectable colors with the same silvery sheen you find on Russian olive leaves. Here it is in a pretty cinch-waisted suit that has enough charm to see you triumphantly through an assignment at the Watergate. Special touches are the white crocheted buttons and the crisp but fragile looking eyelet bow. The jacket has a cardigan neckline that will take to a handsome variety of gilets. It is one of a pair of aces in chambray... both equally good although we happen to fancy this one. Incidentally, a pair of the crocheted white gloves which are currently brightening some of our best counters would be an elegant adjunct. About $11. For further information please call National 4200, ext. 324.

News of the Women's Clubs

What is the effect of war on the life of women in various parts of the world? To find the answer to that complicated question, special committees of the World's Y. W. C. A. are conducting careful surveys. While the returns still are incomplete, sufficient replies have come in to give a partial picture.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Let's peek into Africa, specifically Nigeria. Miss Dorothy Hinselwood writes: "Except in the coast towns, women of Nigeria on the whole are not war-conscious. In Lagos, excellent work is being done in providing canteens and knitting socks for African troops. For the most part women's vocations are restricted to nursing and teaching except for a few telephone operators and clerks in the coast towns. Also, there are two Nigerian women doctors and one lawyer."

"Most pressing social problems confronting West Africa are illiteracy, traffic in children of 7 or 8 years, which leads to prostitution, industrial unrest (demand for higher wages, etc.). After the war, serious unemployment for girls and women is anticipated."

However, in South Africa comes word from Miss Elizabeth Lester of Port Elizabeth that more and more girls are joining up here and there in isolated spots. Out on the veldt, girls of the Special Signaler Corps are working.

Swiss Delinquency Up

In French Switzerland the war has brought an alarming increase in juvenile delinquency, especially among boys. The report from Geneva emphasizes the increased volunteer work among women and their commendable participation in the national emergency. Also from Zurich comes information that throughout German Switzerland, family relations tend to be disrupted because of mobilization. But in many cases an increased appreciation of the values of settled home life has resulted. Women are greatly overburdened from doing the work of both sexes. So far, plans for reconstruction make no provision for women.

Because the situation in India is not clear cut in regard to the war and is so confused politically, women are less affected by war than in most countries. Many of them are unaware that the war is happening, according to a report from Miss Guthrie of the Y. W. C. A. staff.

"Women in Jamaica are not affected in the same ways as in most other countries," writes the World's Y. W. C. A. representative, Miss Stewart. "Although unemployment is rife, cottage industries are being encouraged as recommended by the West Indies Welfare scheme."

Food Costs Rise

Now we jump to South America. Miss Bernice Miller writes from Uruguay that so far the effects of the war are chiefly in the realm of increasing food costs and unemployment—the latter, though chiefly among men, affects women indirectly. "Difficulty is occasioned as a result of the U. S. Embassy's employing graduates of certain institutions at higher salaries than those paid by local firms. Blacklisting of German and Italian firms has caused some employment among women clerical workers. The entrance of many women and girls of socially prominent families into nurses' aide courses and hospital would seem to be a good omen for the elevation of attitudes toward the nursing profession."

If you look about you at home, you can see the direct effects of the war on women's lives in the United States.

Bits of This and That...

Now that the CONGRESSIONAL CLUB has closed for the summer, the associate members—the young daughters of the Senators and Representatives—are transferring their Sunday afternoon tea dances to the Sulgrave Club. So the officers' dance tomorrow afternoon and hereafter during the torrid months will take place from 5 to 8 p. m. at the Sulgrave, at 2001 New Hampshire Avenue, INSTEAD OF THE CONGRESSIONAL CLUB. "WASHINGTON WELCOMES YOU PROGRAM" committee is issuing a special invitation to service men and women, Government and other war workers, as well as the general public to join a group at the Franciscan Monastery, 1400 Quincy Street Northeast, tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. Those desiring to go with hostesses should meet 3 p. m. sharp at the Y. M. C. A., Eighteenth and G Streets Northwest. An inquiry at the desk will bring complete details. Later the group visits the new U. S. O. Club, 1912 North Capitol Street. The "Washington Welcomes You Program" is sponsored by the defense commission of the Federation of Churches... ARMENIAN RELIEF CORPS gives an unusual concert tomorrow afternoon, 3 o'clock, at the Statler Hotel. Among the featured artists are Mme. Arakian, concert soprano well known in New York's Town Hall, and Anahid Ajemian, 17-year-old soloist with the Plainfield Symphony Orchestra. Also on the program is Alexander Aslanov of Moscow, noted pianist. The program consists largely of Armenian music, but also there will be numbers from Tchaikowski, Ravel and Kreisler... SINGLE TAXERS and their friends hold thirty-second annual picnic tomorrow at the home of Mrs. Jessie Lane Keeley, 4512 Sheridan Street, Riverdale, Md.

Save yourself time and effort these summer days by building your desserts around ready-baked cake. Pictured here is a lace-top pie made of cake from the grocery store. You can make either hot or cold desserts by using these ready-baked cakes and combining with other foods.

"Eat your egg the cake way." That's a valuable slogan to remember. You should also be remembering to eat your five or six eggs each week. You can have your cake and not bake it, too. This is accomplished by buying plain, uniced cakes at your grocery and then putting them together with thick pudding.

Buy a box of the handy, prepared pudding when you get the cake. Put two layers of the plain cake together with the pudding, or use jam. Then on top place a lace paper dolly. Sprinkle confectioner's sugar through the pattern. Remove the dolly. In this way you will be preserving your sugar supply.

Cup cakes can also be made into a delicious dessert. Let's call this version cold 'n' hot, for the cakes are heated in the oven and then center-filled with something cold. Cut the cup cakes into quarters and heat quickly in the oven. Arrange on individual serving plates and heap the center with chilled Bavarian cream, fruit whip, apple sauce, pudding or ice cream.

If there is no demand for a special kind of biscuit shortcake, you can effect a delicious one by splitting in two layers an uniced cake you can buy packaged at your grocery. You can sometimes find shortcake shells, too. Beat the cake or shells in the oven, then heap with chilled sugared berries. Serve with plain cream, unless you want to whip some cream the gelatin way.

When days are so uncomfortably warm cooks will want to cook cool. Let's make a jellied entrée today and other foods that will make it easier and cooler when she is assembling the meal at the dinner hour.

Make the Jellied Chicken and Vegetable Salad in the cool of the morning and tuck it into the refrigerator. Get your cake at the grocery store. See that you have some fresh bread in the bread box. Put on the tea kettle and make tea at the zero hour. Then sit down and enjoy the meal in a calm, cool and collected manner. Here is a suggested menu for cool cooking:

Dinner Menu

Jellied Chicken-Vegetable Salad
Harvard Beets Savory Rice
Enriched Bread Butter
Lace-Top Pie Tea

The recipe for the jellied chicken and vegetable salad follows. Perhaps you will have a cup of cooked chicken left over from Sunday dinner.

JELLIED CHICKEN-VEGETABLE SALAD
Soak 1 tablespoon gelatin in 1/4 cup cold water and dissolve in 1 1/4 cups hot chicken stock. Add 1 teaspoon mustard, 3 tablespoons vinegar and 3/4 teaspoon salt. When cool, add 1/2 cup cream and chill until partially jellied. Add 1 cup cooked peas, 1 cup cubed cooked chicken, 1 cup chopped celery and 1 cup chopped pimiento. Pour into mold. When set, unmold onto platter and garnish. Serves eight.

THE GENTLER SEX

The Inflation Dike

June, 1919—Seven months after the armistice of World War I, and men were saying: "Well the fellow without a dollar is 50 cents better off than he once was."

And women were saying: "What do you think I paid for sugar today? Twenty-five cents a pound!"

Between 1914 and 1919 sugar (which today is selling for 7 cents a pound) had jumped 400 per cent—from 5 cents to 25 cents. Milk had jumped 66 per cent, from 9 to 15 cents a quart. Butter had risen from 32 to 61 cents a pound; eggs from 32 to 64 cents a dozen (at one time during the war they reached $11); sirloin steak from 27 to 42 cents a pound. And there was no national food shortage comparable to that of today.

Prices seemingly mounted by the week. Labor strikes swept the country. Also social unrest and a Red scare. The inflation dike had not held.

Will it hold today? Women, who are the spenders of the Nation, are anxiously asking that question as they see more and more of their dollars going for less and less. They are terrified as the specter of inflation hovers ever nearer. But each looks vaguely to some indefinite "they" in some governmental office to "do something."

However, it was a boy's thumb in the dike that saved a town from a flood. So the individual shopper who is too busy, too lazy, too indifferent or too selfish to do her part is loosening another grain of cement in the dike that holds back the flood of inflation. "But," she protests, "I am only one! What can I do?"

The answer is "Plenty!"

Busy though she may be—and that is no busier than the men who face the guns of the Nazis and the Japs—she can find time to be a careful buyer, to weigh carefully the need of every purchase she makes and to make sure as far as she is able that she is not paying more than she should for it.

She can overcome her prejudice against figures, and apply herself to studying the price ceilings and at least keeping those of the most important staples firmly in her mind.

She can, as far as possible, check ceiling prices with those posted in stores and be courageous enough to call the attention of storekeepers to oversights or violations in regard to such prices. She can report flagrant violations of pricing, rationing or black market operations to her local rationing board.

She can prepare herself for active service in the inflation battle by enrolling in the classes in price checking being sponsored by the District of Columbia Consumers' Center, National 6000, Extension 2882, and by becoming a volunteer price assistant at her local rationing board.

She can refuse to stoop to petty feminine cultivation of grocer, butcher or other tradesman in order to obtain illegal favors, and she can be honorable enough to refuse any favors or leniency that smack of price or rationing discrimination.

She can keep herself thoroughly informed on the larger aspects of rationing and price fixing so she will bring an understanding mind to her menu planning, her marketing, and her shopping generally.

She can in the next few days refuse to join the rush to spend her shoe ration coupon 17 if she doesn't definitely need another pair of shoes.

She can keep her head and refuse to create further scarcity and further weaken the inflation dike by buying anything—from a spool of thread to a new rug—that she can do without.

She can, if it is at all possible, swell the vegetable supplies (and keep down the prices) by growing some herself.

She can constantly remind herself that buying defense stamps and bonds does not make her a patriot if she allows the dollars she has loaned Uncle Sam to shrink so that he can purchase less and less equipment for the fighting forces with them.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

It is difficult enough for a parent to determine what is and what is not abnormal in children. With the known differences in rate of development the parent is not to be blamed for believing that in time the child will catch up with children whose development is speedier.

It is just as difficult for me to decide such a point, as the parent is inclined to stress all the "backward" features of the child and ignore those which compare favorably with other children.

Yet, I can sense that Mrs. D. L. is concerned about the slowness of her 3-year-old and hesitates to voice it even to herself.

"My youngest, unlike her older sister, was very late in walking and she is unusually timid. If an auto engine starts noisily, she runs home screaming. If a person with a cane or with anything unusual about him, comes along, she makes for the house."

"I never let her know I notice this. But the real problem is her speaking. She says only single words such as Daddy, Mama, Sissy and does not try to form sentences. The last few days she has made a sentence but she sort of mumbles the words."

"My husband and I think it is very strange for we thought being around the older girls she would develop faster. She understands everything we tell her, but my husband thinks her failure to talk is abnormal."

"We do not force her to talk, for fear she wouldn't try. Is there anything we can do?" You seem to have been very sensible in your handling of both her timidity and her reluctance to talk. Any attention to either of these situations would make the child more self-conscious about them.

This younger child might have less use for language than the older ones, for there would be you as well as the two sisters to wait upon her and fulfill her needs and desires. Perhaps if you were slower about giving her attentions when she points or yells instead of talking, she might develop the use of words as an aid.

It would be wise to have an examination of her hearing. The mumbling might be indicative of the confused way in which she hears sounds. All of you should make an effort to speak distinctly. The other sister's speech handicap might have an influence on this child's acquisition of clear, understandable speech. At this age I should not give up hope that she will learn to speak and that this does not of itself indicate mental backwardness.

"For a minute there, I thought she had a hat like mine—but hers are daisies, mine are buttercups."

Wife Spurred Johnson

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Pretty, witty Eliza McCandle, shoemaker's daughter of Greenville, Tenn., lived a real life version of Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows." When she reached the White House, as wife of much-maligned Andrew Johnson, our seventeenth President (1865-69), she had acquired such a strong habit of believing in her husband that she turned deaf ears to the whispers and gossip which swept the Nation during the Administration of Lincoln's successor. She had come a long way with her problem-husband, and although she was listed as an "invalid" (another one!) during her White House sojourn, she kept the old house humming and gay.

She had been the little town's librarian when Andrew, a runaway tailor's apprentice, came to town. She taught him to read and write and then she married him when she was only 17. Definitely the power-behind-the-man, she pushed him into public life and sat home, caring for her children, and watched him climb the political ladder. So subtle were her methods that it is doubtful if even Andrew knew that his rise to power could be traced to her undaunted courage. As a matter of fact Andrew would have been a trial to any wife; he was tactless, given to speaking his mind in no uncertain terms and to violent fits of anger when the air became blue with profanity. Eliza kept an even keel through it all, and she never lost faith in her husband's ability, even when he endured the humiliation of near-impeachment. Now, of course, we realize that the political storms, which previewed the bitter reconstruction days, were the cause of Andrew Johnson's unfortunate administration. Eliza was smart enough to know it, even then.

And, in spite of the storms and her own poor health, the White House during her term as mistress was a bright and cheerful place, overflowing with family. Besides the President and his lady, there were two sons, two daughters (and the husband of one) and five grandchildren. One of the daughters acted as official mistress due to her mother's invalidism, but no one denied that Eliza was the power and the personality who set the pace in the President's mansion. In fact, the Washington society that spurned her misunderstood husband had a great admiration for her.

With all her later troubles, Eliza must have looked back on her early romance with much affection, remembering days she spent reading aloud to her young husband as he silently sewed in his little tailor shop. From small-town tailor to the Presidency is a typical American pattern. . . . And the "little woman" who helped him arrive at the heights completes the design.

Here is one of the best ways we know of getting your "money's worth."

It started as the result of a store's patriotic attempt to sell war stamps. It developed into one of the busiest counters we've seen since the last pairs of nylons were on sale!

They will make you a corsage (and boutonnières for the men) for just the price of the materials and the stamps. You can select any price stamp—10-cent ones look just as smart. Nimble fingers will make them up into any design you can imagine. Corsages are as low as 60 cents and boutonnières 40 cents.

Original favors, table decorations, and novelties are also made with stamps—as low as 15 cents and as high as your pocketbook allows. With pride they tell about the bride's bouquet that was made with 50 stamps (lucky bridesmaids who catches it!).

How is this for turning your purchases into investments? Call NATIONAL 4200, extension 324 for further information.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

A salad without dressing is like bread without butter or coffee without cream. It takes the dressing to turn it into a chef's dish. But there are calories lurking in that good old French dressing and they are what you have to watch out for when you are trying to pry off the excess pounds.

To be sure, you can dole yourself out a tablespoonful of dressing for 65 calories—but who wants just one? Or, you can do the Spartan thing and use plain vinegar and seasoning for no calories. Or, you can mix up a tasty mineral oil dressing for not enough calories to count.

Now, there is some question as to the destructive effect of mineral oil on vitamin A. This vitamin is fat soluble. In every-day language, it dissolves in fat. But the experiments having to do with the loss of vitamin A in the presence of mineral oil were carried on with animals and enormous amounts of the mineral oil were used—the equivalent of about a pint a day for a person.

In experiments with people, a moderate amount of the oil was used and no more than a normal amount of vitamin A was included in the diet. But the oil was taken at one time of the day and the menus furnishing vitamin A were scheduled for four or five hours later. Under those conditions, there was no loss of the vitamin that could be measured.

I am in favor of a reducer's French dressing made with mineral oil and for what I regard as very good reasons. The decrease in quantity of food always tends toward constipation and a lubricant is needed. Mineral oil is a lubricant.

For another thing, the dressing adds zest to salads—important foods in anyone's diet, but particularly in the reducer's. Anything that helps the reducer to stay with a diet until excess fat is lost is a health measure because excessive weight is not healthy. And, lastly, now that salad oils are rationed, mineral oil comes in very handy for French dressing. It saves red stamps for extra meat.

It would be hard for the reducer who follows my Victory Reducing Diet to miss out on vitamin A. The menus are high in the vitamin through generous use of green and yellow vegetables and yellow cheese. However, to keep the diet on the optimum side, it is suggested that the menus be supplemented by a concentrate and that it be taken right after breakfast. This allows plenty of time for the absorption of vitamin A before the luncheon or dinner salad.

Vitamin A is so essential to well-being that you might like to know more about it. It occurs in food in two forms. In plants, it is carotene and is converted into vitamin A after it has been eaten. In animal products containing vitamin A, this conversion has already taken place. Richest sources of carotene are green leafy and yellow vegetables and richest sources of the pure vitamin are fish liver oils from which the concentrates are made. Large quantities are also furnished in liver, kidney and other glandular meats. Since we differ so widely in our ability to change carotene into vitamin A, I have been careful to include both sources in the daily menus. It may further reassure you to know that this vitamin can be stored in the body for future use.

I have been helping you reducers for a long time now and I realize that you have to give yourself a few breaks in order to stick with a diet. You cannot use liberal amounts of regular French dressing and lose weight and even a measured amount, strictly within the calorie limit, takes the place of some essential food. So either vinegar and seasoning or reducer's French dressing would seem to be the answer.

When They Said 'Action' They Really Meant It!

Warners Do It Again With Maritime Film;
Author-Soldier Makes His Point Clear;
Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

IF WE SEEM to be getting the cart before the horse, or something, you can blame it on the heat!

But the fact remains that in Sunday's column will be found a speculative opinion of "Action in the North Atlantic," coming to the Earle screen next Friday. Between the time those dispatches were written and their bursting into public view, we have seen the picture.

We therefore beg to petition that any favorable anticipation expressed in Sabbath's paper be multiplied by any figure you like from 10 to 1000. "Action in the North Atlantic" is the most stupendous action-drama of the sea that has so far come to the screen. More than that, it is a stirring tribute to the merchant marine and a mighty salute to the American spirit that will win the war. The voice of the President says nothing to that effect at the end of the picture—not in laudation of the picture, but of the heroic deeds it brings to view.

Able performances punctuate every foot of the film—as might reasonably be expected with Humphrey Bogart, Raymond Massey, Alan Hale and like in the principal roles. Right along with them, in the role of Johnny Pulkaski, is a newcomer by the name of Dane Clark, who should go as far as he cares to in the films. His assignment is the one in which normal expectation would place John Garfield. Mr. Garfield had best be looking to his laurels. Another bit of agreeable casting finds Mr. Massey and Ruth Gordon again playing husband and wife, just as they did in the memorable stage version of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." It occurred to one member of the preview audience that Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln seem finally to be thoroughly and happily reconciled!

By Way of Clarification

From the Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va., comes the following self-explanatory letter:

"Dear Mr. Bell: This is in reply to a letter addressed to your column in The Post of June 2, by a Mrs. Mabel F. LeRoy, Mrs. LeRoy claims to have caught a 'bomber' in the narration accompanying the RKO-Radio 'This Is America' short, 'Boomtown, D. C.', an observation which you support as 'well-founded.' My contention is that it is not an error. I should know, because I wrote the scenario and narration 'way back in December, B. E. (before enlisting).

"Mrs. LeRoy maintains that the reference to Lincoln 'bringing together the great merger of '76' is in historical error. Indeed, it would be, if that is what the script read, but the correct line is 'He held together the great merger of '76.' The union of 13 colonies, and the admission of additional territories into an incorporation of States was the 'merger,' and if the guiding hand of Lincoln did not hold together that union, then my statement was a disputable opinion rather than an error in fact. I later mentioned that 'he saved it (the corporation) from bankruptcy.' This was an oblique and understandably vague reference to the War Between the States, which Mrs. LeRoy thought I meant by 'merger.' Even she will agree that from '61 to well after the Reconstruction, the Union was damn near dissolution.

"Anyhow, the whole device was a perhaps too-involved use of a figure of speech. I'm glad Mrs. LeRoy didn't mention a couple of split infinitives and a participle that dangles into the orchestra pit at every showing. I am glad, too, that I have at last been dissuaded from my conviction that nobody ever listens to the narration, even though—and I can't resist saying it—some of them only listen with one ear.

"I probably wouldn't have bothered you with this letter, except that I found myself near a copy of The Post and a typewriter, both of which weapons can be very dangerous indeed. I hope I've aimed true and winged no innocent bystanders. Sincerely yours, T/Sgt. Philip Reisman, Jr., U. S. M. C."

Thank you, Sergeant Reisman. Far from a bother, and no casualties from where I sit.

Another correction. When we recently noted that the author-producer of "The Country Squire," soon to be presented out Chevy Chase-Bethesda way, was anxious to contact those desirous of taking part in the performance, the wrong initials and telephone number of the gentleman were erroneously communicated to us. Aspirants to auditions should call William H. (not K.) Jarvis, 709 Bradley Blvd., Bethesda, Md., at OL 9451 (not 9541). So now you know—I hope.

We have already generalized on the reported 50 per cent increase in the March of Dimes collections in the last campaign for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, but Cochairman Sidney Lust for Maryland advises that for his territory that is both gross and net underestimation. Maryland contributions leaped from $18,000 in 1942, to $50,000 in 1943. Quite a leap!

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Bergen Finds a Natural for Charlie

Hollywood, June 4 (INS).—Edgar Bergen has plunked down a sizable sum for "The Great Gabbo," by Ben Hecht, and as soon as he returns from an overseas visit to the camps he'll make a movie of it. He could look the world over and never find a more suitable vehicle than this story of a ventriloquist and his dummy.

James Cruze directed it in 1929, with Eric von Stroheim as the ventriloquist and Betty Compson as the heart interest. The wooden dummy was named Otto. Edgar bought not only the play but Otto. However, Otto will be discarded and the story completely rewritten for Charlie McCarthy. As it was written and produced it was heavy, but Edgar plans to lighten it. He will make "The Great Gabbo" an independent basis.

Twentieth Century-Fox has offered R-K-O $200,000 for the latter's interest in Maureen O'Hara's contract. Believe it or not, Twentieth is hard up for leading ladies, what with Gene Tierney, Brenda Marshall and Colleen Wright, Jr., all on the stock's calling list, and Alice Faye threatening to retire and sit by the fire as Mrs. Phil Harris. But the catch is that R-K-O is also short on female attractions. Meanwhile, adapting two little girls to bring up with their four boys.

Money and Don Ameche are

"Just a little refining influence for our wild Indians," said Don. The children will not be babies, but old enough to be companions for the Ameche children, who range from 2 to 9 years.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The Gary Coopers have as their house guest Maj. A. T. Hastings, hero of the Bismarck Sea battles; Carole Landis was miffed over the article in a New York column saying she expected to adopt a baby. "I hope I am young enough to have one of my own some day," she said.

Now that Desi Arnaz joins the Army, Lucille Ball returns to school. She is busy studying catalogues from both U. C. L. A. and U. S. C. and is planning to enroll in music, history and Spanish classes.

HEDDA HOPPER

A Horse on M-G-M!

Hollywood, Calif., June 4.—Taking up horseback riding again, I stumbled on a scoop. Metro has had "National Velvet" on its list of pictures for three years, but found no one to put in it. Now I discover that adorable Elizabeth Taylor, who made her debut in "Last Year at Home," is taking riding and jumping lessons daily to play the lead in "National Velvet." Which must mean it will swing into action soon. . . . Now that George Jessel has signed to direct for Joseph Schenck at Twentieth Century, it would seem that one bad book will do it. . . . Is it true that Francis Allstock of the Rockefeller South American setup, and Esther Fernandez will have the knot tied soon? . . . Marianne O'Brien, who replaced Arline Judge in "Doughgirls," is a modern Cinderella. A few weeks ago she was in the chorus at $40 per week. Now she has turned down $500 a week at Twentieth Century. Her agent tells her he can get more.

Mighty Good, Too
Frances Goldwyn went to Arizona for her son's graduation from prep school. Sam was left to carry on alone. He wasted no time—had Dinah Shore and Danny Kaye come to his house for dinner and rehearse all their songs for "Up in Arms." The reason Dinah won't sign a long-term contract for radio is she's made up her mind that going overseas to entertain our boys is much more important. . . . Sam's testing 35 girls tomorrow, out of which he'll choose 16 for "Up in Arms." Another unknown is Virginia Mayo. He discovered her in New York's Diamond Horseshoe. She played in "Mrs. Astor's Pet Horse." Her grandfather founded East St. Louis.

Shouldn't We Know
Amid the mess of words condemning "Mission to Moscow," has Major de Seversky's "Victory Through Air Power," at which people laughed when the book first came out, will have them laughing on the other side of their faces when they see Walt Disney's version of it. He advocates knocking Germany out of the war by air attack. In a demolition sequence, they blow up dams with delayed action bombs which break down lines, etc. It shows a rocket bomb which penetrates the ground and causes earthquakes. De Seversky was just ahead of his time. . . . A much wedded Hollywood lady, recently divorced, was night-owning with a producer when Beatrice Kay cracked, "Look! She's tossed her heart right back in the ring again."

From One Game to Another
Bruce Humberstone, on the golf links, stumbled across what he's been looking for—a 10-wheeler bicycle. A whole family rode by, and he threw down his clubs, ran after them, and hired the thing for a year '90s sequence in "Pin-Up Girl." The owner said he'd had it 40 years. . . . My friends at Fort Roach called to say, "What do you mean? One picture cost $200,000? Why, all our training films together haven't cost that!" Either my hearing was defective or their expert was giving me double talk! . . . Dorothy di Frasso is back in her house and being entertained by Barbara Hutton Grant. . . . As Joan Blondell walked into the Mocambo she was wearing a slashed-neck, ditto skirt number, and Pat O'Brien greeted her with, "That's a lovely gown you're nearly wearing!"

When Mary Pickford was in New York an interview was arranged and 23 reporters showed up. She's still talking about that dream of hers—girls' town, for delinquent girls, fashioned after Father Flanagan's boys' town.

New York, June 4.

Henry J. Kaiser, Jr., who manages some of the plants owned by his illustrious father, is in New York now. He visited Larry Adler, the harmonica player, and invited him to go West and inspect the new Kaiser steel plant. "How have you been able to build and operate a steel plant in these days?" Adler asked him. "We had somewhat of a priority," young Kaiser replied. "And if you don't know what a priority is, I'll tell you: A priority is something which gives you an option to ask for something which you know you're not going to get anyhow."

Wendell Willkie's "One World" is being translated into Japanese, for sale in the Hawaiian Islands. . . . The "Town Hall of the Air" radio show will be switched to London for July and August. George Denny, moderator for that program, is leaving for England to prepare the broadcasts. . . . Axel Wenner-Gren, who has been on the State Department's blacklist, is operating two new businesses in Mexico City. He organized a silver factory which employs 700 and a furniture factory which employs 400. . . . Col. Darryl Zanuck made a bet last week, on the length of "Oklahoma's" run. Zanuck bet that it still will be running when the war ends.

At the opening of the American-Soviet exhibit in the Museum of Science and Industry, a crowd of Army, Navy and diplomatic officials attended. In one corner of the room, a major general, Henderson of the State Department, and other high-ranking officers were grouped around Captain Yermolov, the chief Soviet Naval Attaché. They whispered among themselves confidentially, checked with each other, and then Captain Yermolov wrote their findings on a piece of paper. . . . Someone who thought that paper might contain information valuable to the enemy, retrieved it from the wastebasket. On it he found the verse and chorus of "Jingle, Jangle."

The Mayor of Cleveland may go to England shortly to tell the British about the Midwest and tell the Londoners about Cleveland's municipal reforms. . . . Phil Hamburger, who wrote the "Divide and Conquer" pamphlet for the OWI, is joining the staff of the New Yorker magazine. . . . M. G. M. will finance the production of "Ankles Aweigh," the Guy Bolton-Eddie Davis musical. . . . This column's newest outlet is the C. B. I. Roundup, the Air Force newspaper published in Delhi. . . . The Katharine Hepburn bit in "Stage Door Cartoon," which is the final scene in the picture, was written by Robert E. Sherwood.

On the Friday before Mother's Day a colonel, stationed with the Eighth Air Force Command in England, wanted to cable some flowers to his mother in Detroit, but learned that the practice had been discontinued by Government regulation. He reported this to an R. A. F. Transport Command squadron leader. "Write a letter to your mother," the R. A. F. man told him, "then go out into the garden and pick some roses." The colonel obeyed. Saturday morning the flier, carrying the roses and the letter, made his regular transatlantic flight. He arrived in Canada at dawn, a pick-up plane took him to Detroit—and he delivered the Mother's Day greetings.

Clare Boothe Luce, describing her husband in Time-style, wrote: "Brilliant, busy-browed, hard-working, crusading, balding Henry Robinson Luce." . . . Ella Logan pining for her husband, dined alone in the Stork Club and sighed: "Have you ever been so lonely that even chow mein looks like someone you're in love with?"

During his current visit here President Benes of Czechoslovakia has been trying to see a number of people he once knew in Prague. Among those he invited was Maurice Feldman, who was the economist for "Der Wiener Tag" and an authority on Central Europe. A mutual friend promised to forward Benes' invitation to the economist. . . . Benes received a reply from Feldman, who now is an Army private stationed at Fort Leonard Wood. "I feel honored, indeed, but I couldn't make it last weekend," he wrote to Benes. "When your invitation arrived I was busy testing new economic theories in connection with my office as washroom orderly."

Junior Group Helps to Organize 'Sunset Symphonies'

Annual Water Gate Concert Events Scheduled to Open Season Next Sunday

The youthful touch was added to the National Symphony Orchestra's Water Gate concerts this week when a Junior Summer Concerts Committee was formed under the chairmanship of Mrs. Norman Keith.

Mrs. Keith's group does not plan to function independently, but to collaborate with the senior Summer Concerts Committee, aiding it in its manifold activities and increasing the interest of the younger set in the "Sunset Symphonies", the gala opening of which is scheduled for a week from tomorrow night.

Meeting in joint session with the parent body in the garden of the Walter Bruce Howe residence last Wednesday afternoon, the junior committee agreed that, since the Navy Department has given the distinguished young violinist, Oscar Shumsky, now musician first class with the United States Navy Band, permission to appear as soloist under Hans Kindler's direction on the opening concert, no more fitting dedication could be found for the first program than "to the members of the armed forces of the United States." Musician Shumsky, who will be heard in the Mendelssohn violin concerto, was granted permission to play at the Water Gate because of the National Symphony's policy of admitting service men and women free to its concerts, a policy that will be continued throughout the summer season.

Tentative plans were also made at Wednesday's meeting for picnics and box suppers prior to the opening concert, probably on or near the Water Gate site. And, the Washington climate being what it is, it was decided that entertainment for visiting soloists and guest conductors during the Water Gate season would be of a spontaneous and, certainly, of an informal nature.

Serving with Mrs. Keith on the Junior Summer Concerts Committee are Miss Barbara Beale, Mrs. Thad Brown, Jr., Miss Lindsey Crawford, Mrs. Peter Dewey, Miss Anne Hudekoper, Miss Patricia Prochnik, Miss Elaine Richard, Miss Joan Rowell, Miss Dorothea Sowers, Miss Anne Sperry and Mrs. A. Lloyd Symington.

David B. Karlick is chairman of the senior committee, which includes in its roster Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Representative Joseph Clark Baldwin, Mrs. Richard Bissell, Robert Woods Bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Harold A. Brooks, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. R. H. Dunlap, E. R. Finkenshaed, Mrs. C. C. Glover, Jr., Mrs. Howe, Mrs. Milton W. King, Laura Lewis, Mrs. George C. Marshall, Mrs. Robert McKay, Mrs. Harold A. Stark, Mrs. Benjamin Thoron, Mrs. Edwin M. Watson and Dr. Kindler.

Cabinet Wife to Leave for Indiana

Mrs. Claude Wickard, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, will leave tomorrow for Indiana to be gone several weeks.

Mrs. Wickard plans to visit her daughter, Mrs. Jean Pickart, at Lafayette, where the former Miss Ann Wickard is finishing her last year at Purdue University. Before returning to her apartment at the Westchester Mrs. Wickard will spend some time at the Wickard farm near Camden, Ind.

Evelyn Talley Selects June 12 As Wedding Date

Miss Evelyn Elizabeth Talley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Talley, Silver Spring, Md., has selected June 12 for the date of her wedding to Private Russell Murphy, Bishop's Head, Md. The ceremony will take place at 4 o'clock in the Silver Spring Baptist Church with the Rev. J. Wesley Loftis, pastor, officiating. A large reception will follow at the home of the bride-to-be's parents.

For her attendants, Miss Talley has chosen her sisters, the Misses Marjorie and Gloria Talley, Sgt. Olin Baker, U. S. A., will be best man. Those who will serve as ushers are Stanley Keyser, Ottoman, Va., a cousin of the bride-to-be; Marcus Rolls of Washington, and Jack Bloomer, Silver Spring.

Mrs. Bird Quietly Wed To F. O'Neill

Too busy with their respective jobs to send out their wedding announcements, friends of Elizabeth Ann Tucker Blake-more Bird O'Neill and her husband, Francis O'Neill 4th, are surprising their friends with the news, just getting around, of their marriage on May 9 in All Souls Unitarian Church.

The bride is working with the Government in charge of radio broadcasts to Latin-American countries. Mr. O'Neill is public relations counselor for the Inter-American Commercial Arbitration Commission and for the American Arbitration Association and his business brings him to Washington frequently.

The daughter of Mrs. H. M. A. Tucker of Westbury, Long Island, he bride is the wife of W. Gillette Bird of New York and was formerly married to John Blake-more of New Orleans, from whom she was divorced. Mrs. O'Neill's father was the late Joseph E. Tucker of New Orleans.

Pre-Fiesta Fete Honors Senator And Mrs. Pepper

Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper were the guests in whose honor Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin entertained at a buffet supper last night before the annual Pan-American fiesta given by the Pan-American Club of the Y. M. C. A.

Other guests included Senora Cristina Michels, Senora Peggy de Freyre, Miss Emily French Myers, Miss Sally Cary Parrish, who joined her mother here yesterday after the close of the Foxcroft School, and her house guest, Miss Patricia Pulitzer, and several young army and navy officers.

Miss Parrish and Miss Pulitzer will leave this weekend for the Bahamas, where they will spend the remainder of the month.

June Wedding for Eileen Wilson And Robert Bird

Details have been completed for the wedding of Miss Eileen Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Wilson of Takoma Park Md., to Midshipman Robert Bird of Detroit, Mich., on Wednesday following the prospective bridegroom's graduation from the Naval Academy in Annapolis.

The ceremony will take place at the Wilson home at 9 o'clock. The Rev. Richard Barron, pastor of Our Lady of Sorrows Catholic Church, will officiate.

Mrs. John Weeks of Silver Spring will be matron of honor, and Miss Marilyn Brown of Takoma Park will be the bridesmaid. Midshipman John Christman will be best man, and another classmate of the bridegroom-elect, Midshipman Hugh Butler, will serve as usher.

After a wedding trip to Detroit and Lake Huron the couple will return in two weeks to Jacksonville, Fla. where the bridegroom-elect will be temporarily stationed.

Mrs. Frank Haeger of Detroit, mother of Midshipman Bird, and Mr. Haeger will arrive the early part of next week to attend the graduation exercises and wedding.

MRS. CHARLES SCRIBNER GRANT.

who, before her marriage to Lieutenant Grant, was Miss Katharine Mayhugh Glascock. She is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Harold Winfield Glascock of Raleigh, N. C. Lieutenant Grant is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lamar Grant of this city.

Lucius Beebe's New York

No one blows harder on the pipes of Pan-Americanism when handling such an assignment than does Franklin Hughes, who has just done over the Monte Carlo Beach with tropical fervor. (We were about to say tropical fever.) Not being of the literal-minded decor gentry, Hughes did not resort to tiring research, nor did he consult with ex-beachcombers along the Amazon to arrive at his current Monte Carlo Beach scenery. It is quite accurate to say that he let his imagination, as well as the hues and appointments of the seasonal bistro, run riot.

Lush and Lavish

It is Hughes' present contention that the popular mood has retrogressed to escapism and that the gadabout longs for the extravagant prewar days. "Lush and lavish" is his own description of the new beach. What the June bugs and July and August and September stay-at-homes are likely to find at the beach is a bar and barroom done with mirrors and a back bar that is aimed to evoke nostalgia for Marina's sultry premises in Havana or the patio in Montevideo, what with its lace matting and a pale green and its oversized abalone and conch shells, iridescent glass bubbles, fish nets and display of musical instruments native to the lands below the Rio Grande.

Even the beach's exterior has undergone a tropical turnover at Hughes' hands, with its lemon-yellow canopy and white fringe sheltering a doorman whose pate is, in turn, sheltered by a solar toupee and whose hide, incidentally, is insensitive to all heckling by cabbies and the cop on the beat. Not one to stop anywhere, the unwavering Hughes has banished all artificial flora and fauna from the premises and has had dispatched from a Florida botanical garden a mad assortment of bamboo water plants, green orchids and other exotic flowers that are the real McCoy and that will take plenty of tending.

To have these botanical rarities on hand for the date of the Beach's formal opening, Hughes commissioned the Floridian Burbanks to force their growth in the sun, and his employers still are heard, as they go about, muttering about such expensive nonsense. The dance room itself is Hughes' supreme notion of escapism extraordinary and it was his deliberate design that the palanquin ceiling of lemon-yellow bangles and the white silk-hand-knotted and fringed rope, all supported by lacquered white bamboo poles, should have as little relation to mundane reality as possible. The lemon-yellow banquettes are, of course, of a piece with the motif, but the oversize pearl buttons in them are sheer extravaganzas.

This Lawless Land

There are cliches which every paragrapher of experience learns to avoid, such as the one about the lout who mistakes the correctly dressed guest in a restaurant for the waiter captain and is politely shown to a table by the guest, etc. Another is the one about the visiting Englishman and his terror of hostile redskins and train robbers once he crossed the Hudson on the way West, so this department records the following with distrust, although it is derived from what is usually known as "an unimpeachable source."

It seems there were a number of high-ranking Italian officers, generals and such, who, as prisoners of war, were being transported to an undisclosed concentration point in this country. They were very high-toned stuff indeed and, according to the protocol extant among high-toned commissioned persons everywhere, were traveling inland from Hoboken in drawing-room cars with mounds of personal luggage in a private train and attended by entourage of United States Army personnel suitable to their station. There was, however, in the vestibule of each Pullman an armed guard who did not seem to be giving the high-toned Italian officers much time and, in fact, looked at them with what might even be construed as distaste and distrust.

Here Lies Answer

Finally one of the generals went to the American officer in charge of their transport with complaints. Weren't they, the prisoners, high-toned people, and hadn't they given their parole not to escape? Why then, the so-fierce armed guards? It was an insult!

The boy officer was on the spot. His orders had been to take no chances with the high-toned generals and mandolin players, but at the same time to trust them with the courtesy due to enemy officers who had the misfortune to be captured. "It's this way, sir, you see," said the boy officer. "Once we get away from the big cities of the East here, it's really pretty lawless country, only recently penetrated in fact and attacks on trains by desperadoes and roaming Indians aren't at all uncommon. The guards are put there, sir, not for your constraint, but for your protection."

The high-toned general was perfectly satisfied. His honor was satisfied. His pals were satisfied, and all was well. What was more important, they were safe!

Jangos to Hold Sale to Buy Jeep

They started a fashion—those Government girls with their bomber fund. And now it's a Jango Jeep that is next on the program. The youthful members of the Jangos (Junior Army-Navy Group Organization) have gone to work with a will to raise the needed funds.

As a medium for the securing of funds they have planned a thrift sale, which will be held on Tuesday, June 29, at St. John's Parish Hall, 3240 O Street in Georgetown, from 10 a. m. to 8 p. m.

Very elated are the Jangos in having been able to secure the services of Mrs. Thomas M. Robins as general chairman for the sale, for it was Mrs. Robins who managed the highly successful rummage sales for the Army-Navy League. Since the latter his discontinued its annual rummage sales those who used to save their cast-offs for that organization are asked to contribute them to the Jango thrift sale. Collection methods will be announced later.

As a send-off Mrs. Ralph Bard, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, entertained the members of the committee yesterday at a luncheon at her home.

Guests included Mrs. Thomas M. Robins, Mrs. Walter G. Layman, Mrs. Dawson Olmstead, Mrs. Julius Furer, Mrs. E. W. Timberlake, Mrs. Sidney Lansburgh, Mrs. Robert P. Patterson, Mrs. Fred Gardner, Mrs. Wilder Baker, Mrs. Alexander Milton, Mrs. Lawrence Crolius, Mrs. Thomas Homan, Mrs. David Barry and Mrs. Robert Daniel.

Patricia Braden Is Honor Guest At Luncheon

Miss Patricia Braden, daughter of the United States Ambassador to Cuba and Mrs. Spruille Braden, was the guest of honor at a luncheon at Pierre's yesterday at which Mrs. Cary Euwer was the hostess.

Miss Braden, who has been in the Capital since last weekend, is the house guest of Mrs. Euwer, who is now making her home with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Stanley, Ambassador and Mrs. Braden are expected to arrive on Sunday for a brief stay in Washington.

Among the guests were Miss Peggy Stanley, Miss Florence Fisher, Miss Laura Belle Wyatt, Miss Achsah Dorsey, Miss Josephine Bowie Addison, Miss Beryl Hobson, Miss Jane Wyatt, Mrs. William Kent, Miss Kitty Funnell, Miss Marie Theresa Norris, Miss Mary Rust and Mrs. John Davies, Jr.

Washington Churches Scenes Of Three Nuptial Ceremonies

Among the Brides Are Miss Alma Lowe, Miss Jane Coleman, Miss Shirley MacKay

Among the brides of yesterday were Miss Alma Lorene Lowe, Miss Jane Elizabeth Coleman and Miss Shirley MacKay. The Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral was the setting of the marriage of Miss Lowe to James Packard Mann. She is the daughter of Mrs. Loren Wesley Lowe and the late Mr. Lowe. He is the son of Mrs. John W. Mann and the late Dr. Mann.

Officiating at the 4 o'clock ceremony was Canon Albert H. Lucas, and John W. Noblett of Detroit gave his niece in marriage. She was attired in white organdy, designed with low basque and slight train. Her finger-tip-length veil of illusion was held by a coronet of stephanotis and she carried white roses.

Miss Jo Ann Richardson, the maid of honor, wore pale green organdy, a headdress of sweet peas with a short green veil and she carried a bouquet of garden flowers. Bridesmaids were Miss Carol Mann and Miss Shirley Mann, wearing pink costumes. John M. Mann was his brother's best man and ushers were Robert U. Mann and Robert P. Haines.

A reception followed at the Hotel 2400. After a wedding trip to New York, the couple will make their home in this city. The couple are both graduates of George Washington University.

McKenna-Coleman

Simplicity marked the wedding in St. Matthew's Cathedral of Miss Coleman to Lieut. James Paul McKenna, Jr., U. S. N. R.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Coleman of Sayre, Pa., and Lieutenant McKenna is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James P. McKenna of this city and New York. The Rev. John Spence read the service at 4:30.

Mr. Coleman gave his daughter in marriage. She was costumed in a gown of Chantilly lace and marquisette and a wreath of orange blossoms held her finger-tip-length veil. Her shower bouquet was of roses, orchids and Stephanotis.

Maid of honor was Miss Marie Coleman, who wore watermelon chiffon, a pale blue cap and carried blue delphinium. Lieut. Joseph P. Brennan served as best man and Lincoln V. Burrows and Theodore J. Klais ushered. A small reception was held immediately after the ceremony.

The couple will make their home in Washington after a brief wedding trip. Lieutenant McKenna attended Lawrenceville School and Yale University.

Crockett-MacKay

Miss MacKay was married to Lieut. Joseph McLain Crockett in the Sixth Presbyterian Church.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. William Henry MacKay and the late Dr. MacKay, and a great-granddaughter of the late Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Lieutenant Crockett is the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Thompson Crockett of College Park, Md.

Officiating at the 8 o'clock ceremony was the Rev. J. Herbert Garner. The bride was given in marriage by her grandfather, Samuel Gompers. She wore a gown of white satin and a finger-tip-length veil. Her bouquet was of roses and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Richard William Walsley, the matron of honor, wore aqua chiffon and carried American Beauty roses. Best man was Lieut. Gerald Prentice, and ushers were Richard Walsley and James Calvin MacKay.

Following the ceremony a reception took place at the home of the bride's mother, and the couple left later on a wedding trip. The bride attended the University of Maryland, where she was a member of Alpha Omicron Pi sorority. Lieutenant Crockett also graduated there and was affiliated with Phi Delta Epsilon fraternity.

Miss Bushong Betrothed to Navy Officer

Mrs. V. S. Bushong of Leesburg, Va., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Adelaide Stone Bushong, to Lieut. (j. g.) Worthington Bowie Houghton, U. S. N. R., son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton of Washington.

Both Lieutenant Houghton and Miss Bushong were graduated from the American University.

The wedding will take place at 7:30, June 10, in Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church. The couple will leave immediately after the ceremony for Lieutenant Houghton's next station.

Senora de Recinos, wife of the Guatemalan Ambassador, will be the guest of honor at a party this afternoon at which Mrs. Parker West will entertain in her apartment at 2101 Connecticut Avenue. Senora de Recinos will be leaving shortly for her home in Guatemala, where she will spend the summer months. Mrs. West has asked in a bridge-playing group from 2 to 4 o'clock, and at 5 o'clock additional guests will come in to tea.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace I. Pack are spending a few days in New York.

Judge Marion Harron will entertain at a tea on Tuesday at the American Association of University Women in honor of Miss Josephine Schain, United States delegate to the Hot Springs Food Conference. The party will be from 4:30 to 6:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Arthur White of Midleburg, Va., has as her house guest her daughter, Mrs. Newell Ward, the former Miss Bettina Belmont. Mrs. Ward has arrived from the West Coast, where she has been with her husband, Lieutenant Wood, U. S. A.

Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Frank Gregg Kean and Mrs. Chalmers A. Graham entertained at an informal buffet supper on Tuesday. The delegate from Hawaii and Mrs. Joseph Farrington were among the guests, as were Miss Beverly Farrington, Chalmers G. Graham, who has just returned from North Africa, and Mrs. Graham, Miss Marie Graham, Comdr. and Mrs. Frank Akers, Albert Akers, Comdr. and Mrs. Harry, Lieut. John Butler and Miss Nancy Kean.

Mrs. C. F. Rinker, of Upper-ville, Va., has returned to her home after a visit with her sister, Mrs. Rush Rowland, in Philadelphia. Mrs. Rowland will come to Virginia some time this month to spend the summer with Mrs. Rinker.

Mrs. Lester Neuman, who made an extended visit to Santa Fe, N. Mex., returned yesterday to rejoin Dr. Neuman at their home on Brandwine Street. Their daughter, Miss Alice Neuman, who recently graduated from Smith College, is also with them.

Mrs. Merryle Stanley Rukeyser has returned to her home in New Rochelle, after a short visit with her mother, Mrs. Louis Simon, at the Shoreham.

Sale of Men's Slacks

Slacks . . . slacks . . . and more slacks. That's the crying need for summer . . . but make sure they're washable. Slacks for gardening . . . slacks for golfing . . . slacks for tennis . . . slacks for fishing . . . slacks for walking . . . slacks for lounging.

And since you're practically going to live in slacks during your off-duty hours, you'd better get several pairs at this special price. Cotton cords and plain weaves in light and dark shades. Solid shades, an assortment of stripes and other patterns. Pleated fronts, deep pockets, belt loops and reinforced at all points of strain to give you longer wear. Some even have matching belts. Select from whites, tans, blues, greys and greens in waist sizes 36 to 44.

P. S. And while you're about it, why not get Dad several pairs for Father's Day. Sunday, June 20th, is the day and slacks like these would make a fine gift.
